PREFACE.

1550925

An article was inserted in the warrant for the annual town-meeting in the spring of 1870, upon the suggestion of Baron S. Crowell, son of Samuel Crowell, Jr., "To see what action the town will take in regard to a History of the town of Newport." The town voted to publish a history. A committee of nine, consisting of Edmund Wheeler, Dexter Richards, Edmund Burke, Amasa Edes, A. S. Wait, Levi W. Barton, Shepherd L. Bowers, William F. Newton, and Lyman J. Brooks, were appointed to take charge of the matter. This committee, shortly after, assigned the labor of preparing the work to the writer. The result of his efforts is now given to the public. How well he has performed the duties given him in charge the reader must judge.

Had we been fully aware of the responsibility of the work, and the amount of labor involved in preparing a History, and especially a Genealogy, of Newport,—however much we may glory in the record of the town, and delight, as we do, in recounting the successes of the past, and in dwelling upon the grand achievements of its sons and daughters, in trade, in finance, in literature, in law, in medicine, in divinity, in agriculture, and all the various pursuits of life,—we should have been slow to embark in the enterprise. We are prepared by our own experience to endorse the remark of the eminent Dr. Albert Smith, M. D., LL. D., the author of the History of Peterborough, a town much like our own, when he says,—“It has proved a work of great labor. It has now, for five years, engaged almost my entire attention.” In addition, it should be remembered that distinguished doctors of law and divinity assisted him nearly all the way in carrying along his load.

The reader will perceive that we have assigned several important subjects to some of our best writers, who have kindly wrought them out. This we have done for two reasons: first, because it would relieve us of a part of our labors, and thus enable us to turn our thoughts in other directions ; and, second, we believed a variety of styles would relieve somewhat the sameness, and impart an additional interest to the work.

The steel engravings, costing in the aggregate several thousand dollars, were mainly contributed by the individuals represented, or by those having a direct personal interest in them ; and to their generosity we are indebted for the additional value they give to the volume. A few not otherwise provided for, that could not well be omitted, were inserted at the expense of the historian. The Hon. Dexter Richards contributed the views of the town hall and the South church and parsonage, in addition to his own dwelling, block, and mill, and E. L. Putney, Esq., that of the Newport House.

It is with pleasure that we acknowledge our obligations for the encouragement and sympathy which have been extended to us during the entire progress of the work, and especially for the patience which has endured these seemingly prolonged labors. We trust that each month's delay has added materially to the value of the volume.

We have endeavored faithfully to gather up all the more important facts and events of the town, and to preserve in the Genealogy a brief record of all its various families.

In laying down the pen, we can but exclaim,—Such is the past ! During the comparatively brief period which has intervened since the settlement of the town, a howling wilderness has given place to cultivated fields and happy homes ; a beautiful village has been built up ; and the hills are echoing the hum of business and the noise of passing trains. And now, turning our thoughts forward, we ask, What shall the future be ? When another century shall have rolled away, and three other generations shall have come and gone, and another historian shall resume the pen, what will be his story ? Will he say the people of that century have been as virtuous, as frugal, as happy, and have made as grand progress in all the arts of civilized life, as the people of the century we have chronicled ? Will the inhabitants of this town and this country then be citizens of a model republic, with its multiplied millions enjoying all the blessings of liberty and equal rights, the glory and the wonder of the world ? Let the future historian reply.

CHAPTER I.

DESCRIPTIVE.

NEWPORT is the shire town of the county of Sullivan, and occupies a central position. It is north of west from Concord,—distance, forty miles, and about ninety miles from Boston. It is bounded on the north by Croydon, east by Sunapee and Goshen, south by Goshen and Unity, and west by Claremont. Area, 25,267 acres. The surface is diversified with beautiful mountains, hills, and meadows. It has three different varieties of soil:—the alluvial, or that which borders on Sugar river, its branches and tributaries: this is easy of cultivation, very fertile, and divided into valuable farms;—the lowlands, which are dry and gravelly, and less productive;—and, the uplands, which are more moist and cold, but which have a strong soil, and yield ample returns for the labor bestowed upon them. The soil of the town, taken as a whole, judged either by its appearance or by the record of its varied productions, is among the best in the state.

MOUNTAINS. Standing in the north-east part of the town, between Sugar river and Reed brook, is Bald mountain. It derives its name from its rocky summit, which is destitute of vegetation. At the west of this, on the north line of the town, between Reed brook and Croydon Branch of Sugar river, is Coit mountain. It commands a fine view of the surrounding country and the lovely valley below. It derives its name from a negro by the name of Vance Coit, who lived near its summit, and was the leader of a colony of blacks who once occupied the summit of the mountain and its eastern slope. Just south of Coit is a smaller elevation known as Buell hill. The swell of land between Croydon Branch and Morse brook was known as Baptist hill. It was first settled by a colony of Baptists from Massachusetts, who had there quite a centre of trade. Blueberry Ledge is a part of the Croydon Mountain range, which extends along the western border nearly one half across the town, and ends in Green mountain, in Claremont. Wilmarth mountain extends from the south-western corner of the town along the southern line; was first settled by Mr. Nathan Wilmarth, and from him its name is derived. At the east of this is an elevation known as Pike hill. It was first settled by three families by the name of Pike. This hill commands one of the most beautiful views in town. It has near its summit an immense boulder known as Elephant Rock, which is thought to bear a striking resemblance to an elephant at rest, and which is visited and admired as one of the greatest natural curiosities in town. Its length is some 29 feet, its height 23 feet, its circumference 90 feet, and it is fully 1,500 feet above the level of the sea. East mountain is in the south-east corner of the town, between Goshen Branch and Sugar river. It has on its eastern slope many excellent farms. Thatcher hill is a portion of this range lying south of Towner brook. Oak hill is near the centre of the town, and was known in the earlier days as "The Orchard," from its having in great abundance many kinds of wild fruit. Break-neck hill derives its name from this circumstance: A wild ox, belonging to Hon. Uriah Wilcox, while rushing down this hill, stumbled, caught his horn under a root, turned a somerset, and broke his neck. Claremont hill is the elevation lying west of the village, and is so called from the fact that the road leading directly to Claremont passes over it. At the top of this hill, some sixty rods north of the road, is a rocking-stone, or loggan, which is an object of much interest. Its estimated weight is about twenty-five tons, and it stands so nicely poised as to be moved backward and forward by a single hand.

RIVERS AND BROOKS. Sugar river, and Croydon and Goshen branches, are the principal streams in town. Sugar river is the outlet of Sunapee lake, and enters the town from the east. The Goshen Branch has its source in Lempster, Goshen, and Unity; the Croydon Branch, in Springfield, Grantham, and Croydon. The two former unite near the centre of the town, at the village, and are joined by the latter some two miles at the north, near Northville, from which they flow west through Claremont into the Connecticut river. This stream takes its name from the many maple orchards found upon its banks, and those of its numerous tributaries. Wendell brook, which unites with Sugar river near the eastern border of the town, has its origin in Spectacle pond in Sunapee. Reed brook, which enters the town from the north, the waters of which were first made subservient to mechanical purposes by Stephen Reed, and which joins the river at Lily pond, comes from Long pond in Croydon. Morse brook, on which are several mills and shops at Northville, comes from the eastern slope of Croydon mountain, and the meadows which lie at its base, and takes its name from Ichabod Morse, who built a saw-mill near where it falls into the river. Kimball brook, just south, was christened for Joseph Kimball, who lived on its banks. Beaver brook, which starts on Claremont hill and flows to the west, derives its name from that animal, which had its home about its waters prior to the settlement of the town. Perry brook, the outlet of Chapin and Governor's ponds, derives its name from Timothy Perry, the father of the Perry race in town. Comstock brook took its name from Jonathan Comstock, whose home stood near its union with the river. Randall brook was so called from Lewis W. Randall, whose mills stood near its confluence with the river. The Unity Springs brook, entering the town from the south, has its source in Gilman pond in Unity. The Towner brook derives its name from Ephraim Towner, one of the early settlers, who had a saw-mill near the junction of Main street and Break-neck Hill road.

PONDS. Lily pond, which is an expansion of Long Pond brook near its junction with Sugar river, in the eastern part of the town; Chapin pond, in the north-west corner of the town; and a portion of Governor's pond, in Croydon, near by it, comprise the list of ponds in town.

MINERAL SPRINGS. Newport has two mineral springs. The one on the farm of Mr. Harmon Richardson, between Northville and Kelleyville, and between Sugar river and the railroad, has been long and favorably known for its medicinal virtues, and has often been resorted to, especially in cases of poisoning and bad conditions of the blood. When first discovered, it was protected by a large flat rock; and other evidences showed that it was known and appreciated by the aborigines. The rock was once dug up by an enthusiastic youth, in the expectation of finding a treasure hidden beneath it. The other spring, situated just north of it, on the farm of Mr. Augustus Wylie, was discovered at a later period, and is claimed to be fully equal to the former in its beneficent qualities. The springs were both purchased in 1874 by Hazen P. Huntoon, M. D., of Boston, with the view of providing suitable hotel accommodations for such as might wish to resort to them, and who has had the water carefully analyzed.

MINES. The town does not abound in mineral wealth. The plumbago or graphite mine in the north-west part of the town, which has been wrought to some extent, is the only mineral deposit in town. It has often been said that private parties have found gold on the banks of the Goshen Branch of Sugar river.

TREES. The town having different kinds of soil, had also a variety of forest trees. The meadows in their primeval state were covered with the elm, the butternut, white maple, willow, and alder; the gravelly and sandy portions, with pine and spruce; while the more elevated regions bore the sugar maple, beech, hemlock, spruce, balsam, red oak, several varieties of birch, red and black cherry, basswood, and other kinds.

ANIMALS. When the early settlers first came to town they found themselves surrounded by wild animals, which were in some respects a great annoyance to them, while in others they contributed much, by their flesh and furs, to their subsistence and comfort. Among the more important were the moose, deer, bear, wolf, otter, beaver, fox, wildcat, catamount, woodchuck, porcupine, skunk, rabbit, mink, and gray, red, and striped squirrels.

BIRDS. The birds here were like those of other towns in this portion of New England. They were the eagle, hawk, owl, crane, crow, duck, quail, partridge, pigeon, snipe, robin, bluebird, bobolink, and a great variety of wood warblers. The partridge, the most abundant then, and still thronging our woods, has been, during the whole history of the town, among the luxuries of its inhabitants.

FISHES. Pickerel, black bass trout, sucker, perch, eel, horned-pout, shiner, and several smaller varieties, are found in greater or less abundance in the streams and ponds.

VILLAGES. The main village is at the junction of Sugar river and the Goshen Branch. Northville, in the north-west part of the town, is where the Morse brook falls into the river. East Newport, in the east part of the town, is about the falls at the Granite Mills. Kelleyville is in the western part of the town. Southville is where the Goshen Branch falls into the meadow.

The Proprietors' Record has a drawn plan of the town agreeable to the royal grant, as given by Isaac Rindge, the surveyor-general of the province. In the south-west portion of the town 200 acres were reserved, to be accounted as two of the within shares for the benefit of Gov. Wentworth. In addition, one share was reserved for the Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts; one share for a glebe for the Church of England, as by law established; one share for the first settled minister of the gospel; and one share for the benefit of a school in said town.

The shares of the proprietors were assigned them by lot. For this purpose, a committee, consisting of Stephen Wilcox, Robert Lane, John Crane, and Isaac Kelsey, were appointed at Killingworth, Dec. 25, 1764, which duty they performed at the house of Mr. John Hastings, Jr., in Charlestown, July 6, 1765.

The same committee that superintended the drawing of lots were also empowered to select a suitable town plot, which was to be divided up, and each proprietor was to receive by lot one or more shares, with convenient highways to all the lots. In April, 1765, twenty-one shares belonging to the original grantees, being forfeited, were sold by auction.

On the second Tuesday of March, 1766, Ebenezer Merrit, Dea. Jeremiah Clement, and Stephen Wilcox were chosen a committee to open a cart-road to Newport, and to open a road at the west end of the lots laid out, which extended from the Griffin place northward; and at the same meeting it was voted that Mr. Morgan sell the boat belonging to the proprietors of Newport, and that Stephen Wilcox should go to Portsmouth and get the charter extended ; and on the first Tuesday of October, the same year, they voted Benjamin Giles, of Groton, one hundred acres of land, provided he build and maintain a grist-mill and saw-mill.

The first meeting of the proprietors in Newport was at the house of Mr. Jesse Wilcox, Oct. 13, 1767—Stephen Wilcox, moderator, Benjamin Giles, clerk. Samuel Hurd, Charles Avery, and Zepheniah Clark were chosen assessors ; and Benjamin Giles, Amos Hall, Ebenezer Merrit, Samuel Hurd, and James Church a committee to lay out a second division of land. The first division extended across the meadows from east to west, and contained each fifteen acres. This meeting voted to lay out to each proprietor thirty-five acres, either at the east or west end of the lots already laid out. This meeting adjourned to the “ 16th inst., at the House of Zepheniah Clark, Innholder in said Newport.” At the adjourned meeting, it was voted that Zepheniah Clark, Ebenezer Merrit, Benjamin Bragg, Samuel Hurd, and Jesse Wilcox, having families now in Newport, have each eighty acres of land ; and, also, that any person who is a proprietor and becomes an inhabitant, with his wife, in said Newport, by the first of July, 1768, shall be entitled to eighty acres ; others, who have been in town to improve the first division, fifty acres.

Feb. 2, 1769, the proprietors having failed to perform the condition in their charter which required them to cultivate five acres of land in five years for every fifty acres, had a further period of four years granted them to fulfil the conditions. At that period, as stated by Gov. Wentworth in his extension of the charter, fifteen families had settled in town.

In 1772, they voted to build a Proprietor's House, which might also be used for church and school purposes. In 1782, Josiah Stevens was voted ninety acres of land, on condition that he cause the plan and survey of the town to be made. It was neatly done on parchment, and is now in the keeping of Amasa Edes, Esq., present clerk.

CHAPTER III.

EARLY SETTLEMENT.

THE immediate cause which first awakened public interest, and led to the survey and settlement of the land along the Connecticut river northward from Charlestown, was the return of Connecticut and Massachusetts soldiers from the French War,—in the prosecution of which they had passed through this valley on their way to and from Canada,—all of whom brought home most flattering accounts of the fertility and promise of the country. Soon after, application was made to the proper authorities, and two tiers of towns on each side of the river were surveyed, and a large share of them incorporated, as early as 1761.

The especial attractions of Newport were probably first discovered by a young man by the name of Eastman, who came here from Killingworth, Conn., as a hunter and trapper, and who was probably the first white man who entered the town. He was charmed with the beautiful meadows, and still more so with the abundant supply of otter and beaver, which he here found in great abundance. On his return home laden with furs, he gave his friends such a description of the country as induced them to apply for a charter, and finally led to the settlement. After disposing of his furs, Eastman again sought the new country, but never returned. A skeleton was found on the farm of Reuben Haven by the early settlers, which was supposed to be his. As confirming the truth of this tradition, we have the fact that the charter of the town was granted to the inhabitants of Killingworth, his native place.

Another Eastman, possibly a brother of the foregoing, who was father of Dea. Benjamin Eastman, one of the early settlers, came here also, trapping for otter and beaver, prior to its settlement, having probably the additional hope of finding some trace of the lost friend. While visiting his son here in after-life, he was often heard to relate his experiences as a trapper in the wilderness.

During the summer and fall of 1765, six young men came here from Killingworth, Conn., cleared six acres of land each, and, after getting in a crop of rye, returned home and spent the winter. The following year, in June, 1766, these men having an addition of two to their number, making eight in all, five having families, came and made the first permanent settlement. No record or tradition is found showing the precise day of their arrival. All accounts agree that they arrived in town Saturday night; that they were detained by a bad place in the road on Pike hill, where they camped for the night; and the following day, after accomplishing the remainder of their journey, they spent in religious worship under the shadow of a pine tree which stood just south of the A. Pease residence.

The following were among the earliest settlers, the first five having families:

Zepheniah Clark,	James Church,	William Stanard,
Ebenezer Merrit,	Ezra Parmelee,	Jesse Lane,
Benjamin Bragg,	Jesse Kelsey,	Benjamin Giles,
Samuel Hurd,	Nathan Hurd,	Charles Avery,
Jesse Wilcox,	Ephraim Towner,	Absalom Kelsey,
Amos Hall,	Roswell Hull,	Daniel Dudley.

Being the first on the ground, they had their choice of lands. They selected the meadow lots which had previously been laid out. The site which they selected for a common, and which they anticipated was to be the centre of business for the town, was on the beautiful table-land between the Call hill and the residence of Dea. Joseph Wilcox. Benjamin Bragg settled on the George H. Fairbanks place, Absalom Kelsey on the Reuben Ainger farm, Jesse Wilcox on the J. E. Wilcox place, Samuel Hurd on the A. Pease farm, Zepheniah Clark on the R. P. Claggett place, Ebenezer Merrit on the William Carr farm, and Ezra Parmelee on the Griffin place.

A few years later another colony came from Massachusetts, principally from Worcester county, and settled in the north-

Josiah Wakefield place, north of Northville and Croydon line. As these people were nearly all Baptists, this locality was soon known as Baptist hill. The Wakefields, the Havens, the Metcalfs, the Durkees, the Chamberlains, and the Wheelers, of this town, and the Stows, the Jacobses, and others, of Croydon, belonged to this company.

CHAPTER IV.

REVOLUTION.

FROM the earliest moment in the Revolutionary conflict, the sympathies of all our citizens as one man were enlisted in the cause of their country. Coming from the land of a Sherman and a Hancock, they were fully imbued with a love of liberty and a hatred of oppression, and, above all, they were unable to bear those grievous wrongs which were being heaped upon them by a country from which they had received so little. They comprehended fully the nature of the terrible struggle in which they were about to engage, and in some degree the magnitude of the grand issues that hung upon it, and hence were ready at all times to answer with cheerfulness whatever call their country saw fit to make upon their patriotism, whether that demand was for men, or for the means to carry on the struggle.

The first act of the town in relation to the Revolution which we find among the records was the appointment of a Committee of Safety, which was done July 20, and enlarged August 7, 1775, consisting of the following members: Benjamin Giles, Aaron Buel, Jesse Lane, Josiah Stevens, Robert Lane, and Jesse Wilcox.

THE ASSOCIATION TEST.

In Congress, March 16, 1776.

Resolved, That it be recommended to the Several Assemblies, Conventions, and Councils or Committees of Safety of the United Colonies immediately to cause all Persons to be disarmed within their Respective Colonies, who are notoriously disaffected to the cause of America, or who have not associated and refuse to associate, to defend by Arms the United Colonies, against the Hostile attempts of the British Fleets and Armies.

CHAPTER V.

CIVIL WAR.

THE news of the attack on Fort Sumter, on the 11th of April, 1861, awakened the citizens of Newport, as of all parts of the North, to a full sense of the gravity of the occasion, and they shared in the general enthusiasm for the maintenance of the Union. A meeting of the citizens was held on the 22d of April, which was attended by substantially the whole adult population of the town, without distinction of party. This meeting, with entire unanimity, pledged the raising of $1,500 for the fitting out and support of such as might volunteer to fill the quota of the town, in answer to the call of the President, then just issued, for seventy-five thousand men to serve three months. This action was afterwards ratified by a legally called meeting of the town.

The ladies formed themselves into an association for the purpose of working for the relief of the soldiers in the field, and through the war rendered efficient services in connection with the soldiers' aid societies of the country.

Ira McL. Barton, Esq., a promising young lawyer of the town, having received authority for the purpose, recruited the first company of volunteers, being three-months men, under the call of the President, of which he was commissioned captain. The company was in readiness at the earliest required moment, and served during its term of enlistment in the First N. H. Regiment, under Col. Mason W. Tappan. At its return the company was tendered an enthusiastic reception by the citizens of the town.

Each year during the war the records are largely occupied with proceedings in aid of the volunteers of the town, and they show appropriations for this purpose amounting, in the whole, to $70,491.78. Each quota was promptly filled by volunteers, and no draft was necessary during the war to keep up the required quota of the town.

Whole number enlisted from the town, two hundred and forty. The following is a list of their names, with their officers, regiments, companies, and time of service :

Ira McL. Barton, captain 1st Regt., Co. D ; captain 5th Regt., Co. E ; captain 1st Regt. Heavy Artillery, Co. B ; promoted to lieutenant-colonel ; served 4 years, 2 months.

CHAPTER VI.

STATE MILITIA.

THE town was settled amid the stirring events of the Revolution, and hence the people knew how to value our military system, knowing, as they did, from personal experience, how much of peril, of hardship, and of patriotism was implied in the term "citizen soldier." It had wrought out for them a country and all of its manifold blessings, and they clung to it with an abiding interest for more than three fourths of a century.

MUSTERS. The annual muster, next to the Fourth of July, was always considered as one of the most important and attractive days in the whole year. On these occasions all the companies in the regiment, some twelve or thirteen in number, and comprising some six or eight hundred men, were called together. They were inspected and reviewed by the general and his staff, and then formed into a hollow square, with the general and staff, and field officers of the regiment, in the centre, when a prayer was made by the chaplain, and the general delivered a speech. This was followed by an intermission, after which the regiment was again formed into line, and went through various evolutions, marching and counter-marching, and the whole was concluded by a grand sham-fight.

There was much that was exciting and attractive on these occasions. The graceful waving of the many elegant banners, the neat uniforms of the soldiers, the showy and costly uniforms of the officers, the music, which, in addition to drums and fifes, consisted sometimes of half a dozen choice bands, the patriotic speech of the commanding general, often eloquent, the rushing tramp of the cavalry, the beautiful display of the whole regiment in motion as it passed in review, and, more than all, the sham-fight, in which the whole regiment, cheered by the loudest strains of all the bands and drums and fifes, was engaged in a furious combat, which filled the whole region with the smoke and noise of battle.

One of the most successful musters here was in 1842. The regiment, then commanded by Col. Jacob Reddington, Gov. Hubbard, commander-in-chief of the militia of the state, and Maj. Gen. Hunt, who had command of the third division, attended by their suites, were present. The ranks were full and the day fine. The infantry companies then appeared for the first time with new uniforms, new arms furnished by the state, and new banners. Gov. Hubbard made a most eloquent address.

TRAINING DAYS, which were in May, and in the autumn, a few days previous to the annual muster, were days of interest. On these occasions all the companies in town would in the earlier period meet at the old church at the foot of Claremont hill, form into line, and march to the tavern which stood near the residence of Hon. R. P. Claggett, where they would be inspected, imbibe their spiritual rations, and perform various evolutions. Ezra Parmelee, Jesse Wilcox, Josiah Stevens, Elkanah Carpenter, and Josiah Wakefield were among the most prominent officers of that day.

Among the citizens of this town who have held positions in the state militia are the following :

CHAPTER VII.

BY J. L. SWETT, M.D.

“A PHYSICIAN should not only be ever ready to obey the calls of the sick, but his mind ought also to be imbued with the greatness of his mission, and the responsibility he habitually incurs in its discharge. These obligations are the more deep and enduring, because there is no tribunal other than his own conscience to adjudge penalties for carelessness or neglect. Physicians should, therefore, minister to the sick with due impressions of the importance of their office, reflecting that the ease, the health, and the lives of those committed to their charge depend on their skill, attention, and fidelity. They should study, also, in their deportment, so to unite tenderness with firmness, and condescension with authority, as to inspire the minds of their patients with gratitude, respect, and confidence.”

From an examination of the early records of the town, and from conversation with some of the oldest inhabitants, it is ascertained that the medical profession, an important element in every community, has, from an early period in the history of Newport, been represented by men of character, influence, and ability; and though little is now known of those here previous to the year 1790, yet that little is such as to warrant pleasant impressions, and afford assurances of devotion to the interests of their calling. Of these, brief mention may be made of DR. AARON MACK, who was the first physician to attempt a settlement here. He was born in Hebron, N. H., Jan. 11, 1761; read medicine, and came here in 1785. He was married in this town, Dec. 29, of the same year, to Martha Newton, of Groton ; and to them a daughter was born, Nov. 23, 1786, whom they called Polly. He was here but a short time afterwards, and the remainder of his history is unknown. DR. HENRY BLISS was his successor. He came in 1787, and while here acted in the capacity of both physician and preacher. He, also, soon left.

At the historical celebration, in 1846, it was reported that MRS. JEREMIAH NETTLETON, who came to this town in 1779, possessed unusual skill as a midwife, and that in the winter of 1780 she walked the distance of three miles, on snow-shoes, to discharge professional duties. It was also stated, that on another occasion, and for a like purpose, she was drawn by four men to New London on a hand-sled, the men walking on snow-shoes.

About 1790, DR. JAMES CORBIN, the first physician and surgeon whose settlement was permanent, established himself here, and commenced practice. There are those yet living who not only have distinct recollection of the manners and merits of this pioneer physician, but who have also had acquaintance with all who have succeeded him to the present time. Such, and many others, will be ready to bear cheerful testimony to the fidelity of the medical profession in Newport in the discharge of their duties, both to the sick and to the community, and can decide how far their general deportment and their devotion to the trusts reposed in them have conformed to the requirements specified at the beginning of this article. It is a notable fact, that the active professional lives of three individuals,—Drs. Corbin, McGregor, and Swett,—cover the entire period, from the first established physician, in 1790, to the present time. This embraces a term of eighty-six years, and reflects credit upon the community for stability of purpose, and respect for the profession which has done so much to assuage the sorrows of life, to lengthen its duration, and free it from every element incompatible with the highest enjoyment.

Dr. James Corbin was born in Dudley, Mass., in 1762. Very little is known respecting his ancestry, his own youth, or his early educational advantages ; but he read medicine with Dr. Corey, of Sturbridge, Mass., and afterwards with Dr. Hamilton, an eminent surgeon, of Somers, Conn., with whom he also practised some time. He came here about the close of the year 1790. At that period Newport and the adjoining towns were comparatively a wilderness. The population was widely separated; and the roads were rugged, and often led through dense forests. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, the doctor had resolved that this should be his abiding-place, and the field for the exercise of his professional skill. The sequel soon justified the wisdom of the decision, as he was at once introduced into a laborious if not into an immediately lucrative practice; for his services were in demand not only at home, but throughout all this part of the country. His chief mode of travel was upon horseback; and the amount of labor, fatigue, and exposure encountered through his whole life was great. Still he found time to keep himself tolerably well posted in the improvements of his profession, the literature of which was much more meagre then than at present.

In addition to his love for his profession, and the deep solicitude felt for the best interests of the sick, Dr. Corbin also had strong desires for agricultural pursuits, to gratify which he purchased an extensive tract of land, a mile or two from the village; and, in order that the operations might be more immediately under his observation, he left the village, and moved on to the farm. Here, without abandoning his practice, he erected substantial buildings, cultivated his broad acres, and surrounded them with stone walls, which are to this day an enduring monument of his enterprise. He ever looked with pleasure and a just pride upon his well-tilled fields, his well-filled barns, his well-stored granary and larder, as well as upon his choicely selected horses, cattle, and sheep; and from these abundant supplies, the poor, in their sickness and destitution, were often sharers of his munificence.

Dr. Corbin was a good townsman and reliable friend, as well as a kind and affectionate husband and father. He was cheerful in his disposition, a lover of company, and fond of a story. Many amusing anecdotes of him have been related, one of which will suffice: Returning to his house at a midnight hour, he noticed a man hastily leaving his cellar window. Quickly dismounting, he at once observed by the widow a basket of pork. Stationing himself by it, he was soon approached by a man from within, who passed up to him more pork, and said,—“I have reached the last laying; had I better get any more?” “Yes,” was the reply, “get the whole, and then come quietly out.” He obeyed the direction, but, to his utter surprise, was confronted by the proprietor of the mansion. The matter was generously compromised, the invaders humbly confessing, and imploring concealment. The reply was,—“Your names shall never be disclosed: the facts are mine, and I will not relinquish my right to relate them.”

DR. C. was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He died Jan. 16, 1826, aged 64 years.

DR. WILLIAM JOSLYN, who had been a teacher for some time, studied medicine with Dr. Corbin, and commenced practice in this town in 1804. After a residence here of six years, he moved to Waitsfield, Vt., where he was long engaged in a good and successful business, and died there, June 23, 1834. He married Miss Rebecca Perry, of this town, a sister of Col. Jessiel Perry.

DR. ARNOLD ELLIS was one of the early practitioners of Newport, and, while here as a physician, acted also in the capacities of post-master, town-clerk, and jeweller. He was a son of Jacob Ellis, and was born in Meriden, Conn., Oct. 29, 1776. From Newport he went to Sutton, where he spent several years, and from thence to Newbury, where he died at an advanced age. He married Elizabeth Dudley, and, at her decease, Hannah, daughter of Matthew Buel.

DR. JOHN B. MCGREGOR was a native of this town, and a son of Lieut. John McGregor, who, in 1780, while yet a young man, came from Connecticut to this place. He selected a tract of land in the north-westerly part of the town, where Augustus Wylie now lives, and in this wilderness commenced the felling of trees, and other operations, preparatory to a homestead. He succeeded in getting a few acres cleared and sowed with grain the first season, built him a log house, and returned to Connecticut to pass the winter. The following spring he was married, and with his wife came back to Newport and took possession of the cabin. Here Providence smiled upon their labors; primeval forests disappeared, and gave place to fields of waving grass and grain, and to pastures covered with happy herds.

The log cabin was soon exchanged for a more tasteful, convenient, and spacious habitation. To them children were born, and, on the 27th of March, 1787, the subject of this sketch, who passed his childhood and youth at the paternal home. Having acquired suitable age and education, he pursued the study of medicine with Dr. Corbin, attended lectures at Dartmouth college, and graduated there in 1809. The following year he commenced practice in this town, where for more than a quarter of a century he was engaged in an extensive professional business, and shared largely the confidence, esteem, and affection of the whole community.

Dr. McGregor was a great admirer of Dr. Benjamin Rush, and studied his writings with unalloyed delight. In his practice he was bold and decided, and in his opinions positive. He was a good citizen, a friend of order, education, and religion. In manners he was cultured, affable, and polite, while all the impulses of his nature were generous almost to a fault. These qualities of character, combined with his public spirit, made him exceedingly popular, both as a man and a physician, and enabled him to exert a wide influence in the neighborhood. He was a great lover of sacred music, was for many years the leader of the choir in the South church, and was chiefly instrumental in procuring the organ that so long graced that temple of worship, and pealed forth melodious sounds in harmony with devotion.

In the autumn of 1838, Dr. McGregor left Newport and went to Rochester, N. Y., for the purpose of being with his daughter Marion, the distinguished pianist and organist, who was established there; but the change was not promotive of his happiness. The interruption of life-long associations, together with pecuniary embarrassments which had overtaken him, so saddened and depressed him that he ceased to be what he before had been. From this time he had no permanent abiding-place, but vibrated between his new and his old home, for which he cherished the strongest affection, until death closed his checkered life while visiting a daughter at Davenport, Iowa, on the 14th of September, 1865, in the eightieth year of his age. His remains were brought to Rochester, N. Y., and placed by the side of those of his wife, who, on the 28th of September, 1856, preceded him to the Spirit Land.

the first of these is the fact that the British government has been unable to secure the necessary funds to carry out its policy of expansion. This has been due to a variety of factors, including the high cost of maintaining a large empire, the loss of the American colonies, and the increasing competition from other powers. The second factor is the internal weakness of the British state, which has been unable to reform its constitution and to establish a strong central government.
 This has led to a series of constitutional crises, and to the eventual establishment of a parliamentary system. The third factor is the rise of other powers, particularly France, which has been able to challenge British supremacy in the world. This has led to a series of wars, and to the eventual decline of British power. The fourth factor is the changing nature of the world, which has become more complex and more dangerous.
 This has led to a new era of international relations, and to the eventual establishment of a new world order. The fifth factor is the changing nature of the British people, who have become more conscious of their rights and more demanding of their government.
 This has led to a new era of political reform, and to the eventual establishment of a new British constitution. The sixth factor is the changing nature of the British empire, which has become more diverse and more complex. This has led to a new era of imperial administration, and to the eventual establishment of a new imperial system. The seventh factor is the changing nature of the British economy, which has become more industrial and more commercial. This has led to a new era of economic development, and to the eventual establishment of a new British economy. The eighth factor is the changing nature of the British culture, which has become more modern and more sophisticated. This has led to a new era of cultural development, and to the eventual establishment of a new British culture. The ninth factor is the changing nature of the British society, which has become more democratic and more egalitarian. This has led to a new era of social development, and to the eventual establishment of a new British society. The tenth factor is the changing nature of the British world, which has become more global and more interconnected. This has led to a new era of world development, and to the eventual establishment of a new world order.

DR. ALEXANDER BOYD, whose parents were of Scotch-Irish descent, was born in Londonderry, N. H., Feb. 8, 1784. What were his early pursuits or what his advantages, or with whom he read medicine, is now unknown; but his authority to practice was derived from a license issued by Drs. Ebenezer Larned and Samuel Morrill, censors of the New Hampshire Medical Society, bearing date June, 1815, and having attached the signature of the distinguished president, Josiah Bartlett, M. D. In 1820 he became a member of the state medical society, and for a quarter of a century was engaged in business in this town. December, 1816, he married Margaret, daughter of Wentworth Claggett, Esq., by whom he had four children, all of whom died in early life. She died in 1834; and his second marriage was with a sister of his former wife.

Dr. Boyd was a man of strong attachments, social and gentlemanly, and in all respects a good citizen and highly esteemed townsman. He died Sept. 28, 1851, in the sixty-ninth year of his age.

DR. WILLARD P. GIBSON, son of William, a native of Croydon, was born Sept. 2, 1798. After acquiring suitable preliminary education, he studied medicine, and graduated at Castleton, Vt., in 1822. He was engaged in practice about fifteen years, the last seven of which were spent in this town, where he had many friends and a good business. He left here in the spring of 1837, and went to Windsor, Vt., where he immediately turned his attention to the study of theology, took orders in the Episcopal church, and was installed at Woodstock, Vt., Oct. 19, 1837, but died four days afterwards, at the age of 39 years.

DR. WILLIAM F. COOPER was a native of Croydon, a son of Dea. Cooper, and a brother of Hon. Lemuel P. Cooper. He was born in 1801, and was early trained to the duties of the farm, in which he was diligently employed until twenty-one years of age, having each winter two months of instruction in the district school. By a right use of these limited privileges, he acquired sufficient knowledge to warrant him in assuming the duties of instructor to others; and the emoluments thus derived he at once appropriated to his advancement in knowledge. Having by his own efforts obtained suitable preliminary educa tion, he read medicine with Dr. Elijah Cooper, attended his first course of lectures at Burlington, Vt., and his second at Brunswick, Me., where he graduated in 1826. He immediately commenced business in this town; but after remaining one year his ambition led him to seek a broader field for its indulgence, and he moved to Kelloggsville, N. Y., where for fifty years he has been engaged in extensive medical and surgical practice, having not only amassed a fortune, but secured an assurance of an enduring, grateful remembrance throughout his neighborhood for his kind and generous offices, his public spirit, and his professional fidelity.

DR. J. L. SWETT was born in Claremont, Feb. 17, 1810. His parents were descendants of immigrants from the Isle of Wight, who came to this country and settled in the town of Dedham, Mass., as early as 1637. They moved in the middle walks of society, and were known for their industry, integrity, and uprightness of character, and for their strict observance of all the proprieties of life. It was their endeavor to impress upon the minds of their children,—of whom there were ten,—a regard for truth, respect for age, reverence of God, and the importance of obedience to the divine teachings; and that which was so faithfully enforced by words, found beautiful illustration in their own blameless lives.

The subject of this sketch was employed in the duties of the farm until eighteen years of age, attending the district school in the winter. In 1828 and 1829 he pursued academic studies at Wilbraham, Mass., and in 1830 at Meriden, N. H. The two following years were spent in teaching; and in the spring or 1833 he commenced the study of medicine, and prosecuted the same under the care of Drs. Tolles and Kittredge, until September, 1835. In the meantime he attended two courses of lectures at Dartmouth college. In September, 1835, he visited Philadelphia for the advantages of observing hospital practice and receiving clinical instruction, as well as to have the benefit of a term of lectures in one of the schools at this seat of medical science. Jefferson college was the one chosen, and from this institution he received the degree of Doctor of Medicine, in March, 1836. In July of the same year he opened an office and commenced practice in this town; and, as a fair patronage and generous confidence were soon accorded, he has remained here to the present time, diligently devoted to the duties of his much-loved profession.

In 1841, Dr. S. became a member of the New Hampshire Medical Society. He has held various positions in the same, and was its vice-president in 1873, and its president in 1874. He has been an active member of the National Medical Association since 1864, also a member of the Rocky Mountain Medical Society, and an honorary member of the California State Medical Society.

In May, 1842, he married Miss Sarah E. Kimball, of Bradford. She closed a life of great gentleness and purity, June 7, 1852, at the age of 28, having been the mother of four children, two of whom,—an infant son of five months, and a daughter or fourteen,—preceded her to the Spirit Land. She left a daughter, aged eight years, and a son of three months. The former, only, survives, and resides in San Francisco. The latter, Dr. W. K. Swett, died in Kerneville, Cal., July 15, 1876, aged 24 years and 4 months. The second marriage was with Miss Rebecca Beaman, of Princeton, Mass., June, 1853.

DR. REUBEN HATCH, who was one of the early physicians of Newport, was a native of Alstead, where he was born in 1787. While pursuing his studies, he attended lectures at Dartmouth college. He came to Newport in 1808, but remained only two years, when he went to Hillsborough, where for a long time he was engaged in extensive practice. He was at Marlow several years, and subsequently at Greggville, Ill., where he died in 1869. His second marriage was with a sister of the late Thomas W. Gilmore, of this town.

DR. ISAAC HATCH was also a native of Alstead, a cousin of Dr. Reuben, and was born in 1795. He attended lectures at Dartmouth college, and commenced his practice at Gilsum. He afterwards went to Moriah, Essex county, N. Y., from which place he came to Newport, in February, 1837, and purchased the house and good-will of Dr. William P. Gibson, who had decided to turn his attention to the Christian ministry. His practice here was fair, but of short duration, for, in October, 1838, he sickened and died of typhoid fever, at the age of 43 years. He was a member of the Baptist church in this town.

DR. MASON HATCH was a brother of Dr. Isaac Hatch, and was born in Alstead, March 3, 1791. After a limited preparatory course of study, he read medicine with his kinsman, Dr. Reuben Hatch, and subsequently with Dr. Charles Adams, of Keene, and attended lectures at Dartmouth college. He at first settled at Hillsborough, and was there engaged in good and successful business more than twenty years. In 1836 he moved to Bradford, from which place he came to Newport in the autumn of 1838, to occupy the place made vacant by the death of his brother. Here he soon succeeded to a good practice, which he retained as long as he was able to attend to it, even visiting in many families after he was eighty years of age. Dr. Hatch possessed a cheerful disposition, had a rich vein of humor, and was quick at repartee. He was a good citizen, and a friend of order and improvement, as well as a faithful physician, ever ready to obey the calls of the sick, not sparing himself if thereby he might minister to the relief of others. He husbanded well his finances, and laid by for life's evening an ample fortune.

His first marriage was with Miss Aphia Andrews, of Hillsborough, to whom there were born eight children. Three of these died in early infancy; two others,—Emily, aged 20 years, and Abby, aged 18,—died of typhoid fever in the autumn of 1839. Of the three remaining, the eldest became the wife of the late Samuel C. Baldwin; the second, of Hon. Dexter Richards; and the third, of William Nourse, Esq.—all of this town. Mrs. Hatch died in September, 1855; and the second marriage was with Mrs. Mary Day, who still survives.

Dr. Hatch was a member of the Congregational church, and died Dec. 2, 1876, at the age of nearly 86 years.

DR. W. C. CHANDLER was born in Andover, Vt., Jan. 3, 1807, and was the son of Dr. Chandler, for many years an eminent physician of that town. His early educational privileges were good, and he prosecuted his professional studies under the direction of his father, and graduated at Dartmouth college in 1829. After a few years of practice in Ludlow, Vt., he visited Philadelphia, and attended a course of lectures in the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. In the autumn of 1838 he came to this town, where he remained till 1841, when he went to South Natick, Mass., and was there engaged in extensive practice until his death, in 1848, in the 42d year of his age. Dr. Chandler was gentlemanly and unostentatious in manner, possessed warm social feelings, had a great love for his profession, and was strictly honorable in all the relations he sustained to others.

DR. THOMAS SANBORN was born in Sanbornton, N. H., Sept. 26, 1811. He was the son of Christopher Sanborn, and a grandson of Dr. Benaiah Sanborn, an eminent physician, held in high esteem in that part of the state, and a lineal descendant in the fifth generation of Daniel Sanborn, one of the first settlers of the town. His early life was passed at home, and his time occupied in the duties of the farm, and attending the district school, with an occasional term at the village academy. At the age of sixteen he was bereft of his father, whose life was lost by drowning, but he remained with his mother upon the farm four or five years, assuming its labors, and aiding in providing for the family. In 1831, he engaged in some form of mercantile business in Lowell, Mass., but his youth and inexperience were not able to cope with the maturity and management of trained financiers, and he failed to realize his highest desire. Quickly rallying from the consequent depression, he turned his thoughts to medicine, the profession of his grandsire, who had often expressed the wish that one of his grandsons might choose for his life-work his own calling, and in the spring of 1833 he entered the office of Dr. Thomas P. Hill, with whom he studied three months, and attended a course of lectures at Brunswick, Me. From this time he again became undecided in relation to his future, and for six years was only for a brief period engaged in any one pursuit. In 1839 his purpose to qualify for the practice of medicine was reformed, and he resumed his studies under the direction of his brother-in-law, Dr. W. H. Hosmer, of New London, with whom he remained two years, attending in the meantime two courses of lectures at Dartmouth college. He was also for six months under the instruction of Dr. Gilman Kimball, of Lowell, and received his medical degree from Dartmouth college in 1841. The same year he commenced practice in Goshen, continuing there until August, 1843, when he came to this town. In 1847, he was induced to remove to New London, but soon became satisfied that this change was not for his interest. After an absence of less than one year, he returned to Newport, where the residue of his life was passed. He now, more than ever, bent his whole energies to the duties of his profession, was prompt in reply to calls, and faithful in ministering to the necessities of the sick. His leisure hours were spent in studying his cases, and in making himself familiar with the improvements of the times, and he was soon in the possession of a full and lucrative business, which he prosecuted until his last sickness, a period of more than twenty-five years. In 1853 he visited Europe, and was absent four or five months, availing himself of the advantages of observation in the hospitals of Edinburg, Paris, and other cities. In 1857 and 1858 he represented Newport in the legislature. In 1862 he was appointed surgeon of the 16th N. H. Regiment Volunteers, and accompanied Gen. Banks's division to Louisiana. On his return, he was appointed U. S. army surgeon for this locality. He was a past master of Mount Vernon Lodge of Free Masons, and was held in high regard by this fraternity. He was also a member of the N. H. Medical Society, and of the National Medical Association. His death occurred July 23, 1875, in the sixty-fourth year of his age.

DR. JAMES A. GREGG was born in Antrim, N. H., Jan. 1, 1790. He was of Scotch-Irish descent, the families of both his parents forming a part of the original band of Presbyterian emigrants who settled in the town of Londonderry, this state, as early as 1719,—their ancestors, a century before, having emigrated from Argyleshire, in the west of Scotland, to the counties of Londonderry and Antrim in the north of Ireland. His early school advantages were quite limited, but, possessing an active mind and a thirst for knowledge, he devised ways by which he acquired a good English education, together with a tolerable familiarity with Latin. He read medicine with Dr. Stickney, of Antrim, and attended lectures at Dartmouth college, where he also graduated. In 1814 he settled in Unity, and remained there eighteen years, engaged in extensive and laborious practice, sharing largely the confidence of the people at home and in the towns around. While there, he not only attended to his professional duties, but found time to aid young men in their more advanced studies. He also represented the town in the legislature. In order that his family might have better educational advantages, he left Unity in 1832 and went to Hopkinton, where there was then a flourishing academy. After a residence of fourteen years in Hopkinton, he moved to Manchester, in 1846, and was in practice there till 1855, when he came to this town, and was in business eleven years. In the autumn of 1866 he visited a daughter at Arlington, Vt., where he sickened and died of typhoid fever, at the age of 76. Dr. Gregg was a self-made man, possessed great physical endurance, a well informed mind, and a readiness to act in any emergency. He was a member of the Congregational church in Newport.

DR. WM. H. HOSMER was a son of Jacob and Catharine Wellington Hosmer, and was born in Concord, June 13, 1814. Until 17 years of age his time was passed at home, attending school, and, as he was able, assisting his father, who was by trade a hatter. After spending one year as a clerk in a furnishing store in Boston, he returned and reëngaged in his former employment for some time, when, by the accidental discharge of a gun, he received an injury of the left hand which temporarily disqualified him for labor, and his thoughts were now directed to some other calling. He pursued academic studies at Sanbornton, and in June, 1835, entered the office of the late Dr. Thos. P. Hill, of that place, under whose care the period of his pupilage was passed. He attended lectures at Dartmouth college, graduating there in July, 1838, and in September following located at New London, where he remained nine years in extensive practice. In September, 1847, he came to this town, but after the lapse of a single year removed to Concord, where he still resides.

DR. LEONARD E. RICHARDSON was born in Auburn, Mass., Oct. 15, 1833, and when but 10 years of age came with his father to this town. He pursued his academic studies at Meriden, N. H., and graduated there with the class of 1853. In the winter of 1854 he commenced the study of medicine, attended one course of lectures at Dartmouth and another at Harvard Medical College, and graduated at the latter institution in March, 1857. Shortly afterwards he opened an office and commenced practice in this town, but as opportunity presented for more immediate business in Stoddard, N. H., he left here for that place, where he remained for a period of eight years, in good and successful practice. From Stoddard he went to Hartford, Conn., his present residence. He married Lois, eldest daughter of Dea. Austin Kibby, of Newport, and has two children.

DR. ALBINA HALL was born in Croydon on the 16th of October, 1800, received a good English education, studied medicine, and graduated at the Berkshire Medical School in 1823. He was in practice at Landaff, N. H., in Hancock, Me., in Fredonia, N. Y., and two or three years in this place, commencing in 1840. His present residence is Croydon, where he has shared the confidence of his fellow-townsmen, having been their representative in 1868, and again in 1869. He was a candidate for state senator in 1871. He married Livia, daughter of Abijah Powers.

DR. MASON A. WILLCOX, a homœopathic physician, is a native of this town, and a son of Albert and Caroline Willcox. He was born Dec. 25, 1844, and passed his childhood and youth at home, attending school, and acting as clerk in his father's store. He pursued academic studies at Meriden and Tilton, read medicine at Ann Arbor, Mich., and graduated at the Detroit Medical College. He commenced practice in Newport in 1869, but after a residence of one year went to Lawrence, Mass., where he is engaged in successful business.

DR. IRA P. GEORGE was born in New Boston, N. H., in 1839. He came to this town when a child, and lived in the family of a relative. He obtained his education at the district school, read medicine with Dr. Sanborn, attended lectures and graduated at Dartmouth Medical College, and commenced practice in Sunapee. He was there but a year or two, and in Newport about the same length of time. In 1869 he went from here to Whitehall, Vt., and in 1871 from thence to Gibbon, Neb., and engaged in other pursuits.

DR. J. S. ELKINS was born in Barnstead, N. H., in 1845. He studied medicine with Dr. M. Walker, of Barnstead, and with his brother, Dr. J. P. Elkins, of Wilmot; attended lectures at Bowdoin and Dartmouth colleges, and received his diploma from the latter institution in 1868, and in the following year commenced practice in this town. He married Louisa A., daughter of Ransom Severns.

DR. W. W. DARLING, son of William, was born in Croydon, Nov. 20, 1834. He studied his profession with Dr. Sanborn, and received his diploma from Dartmouth college in 1859. He was in practice in Sutton, and also in Goshen, for a time, before coming to this town, in 1869, where he yet remains.

DR. DAVID MORRISON CURRIER was born in Grafton, Sept. 15, 1840. He remained on the farm until eighteen years of age; was educated at the N. H. Conference Seminary and Female College, spent a year and a half at the McLean asylum at Somerville, Mass., two with Dixi and A. B. Crosby, at Hanover, several months with Dr. Buck, of Manchester, and graduated at the Dartmouth Medical College in 1867. He was in practice with Dr. Fitz, at Sutton, one year, and was at Sunapee two and a half years. He spent the winter of 1870-71 at the Massachusetts General Hospital, and the spring following came to this town. He married Jennie B. Colby, daughter of Johnson Colby, of Sutton, and grand-daughter of Parson S. Colby, of this town.

DR. HENRY W. BROWN, son of Edward H. Brown, Esq., of Croydon, was born Nov. 15, 1847. He received his preliminary education at Meriden and New London academies, read medicine with Dr. Sanborn, and graduated at Harvard University, February, 1873. The March following, he commenced practice here with prospects of a useful life, but sickened and died, suddenly, Sept. 30, 1875, aged 28 years. He married Caroline, daughter of Moses Barton, of Croydon.

In addition to the foregoing, several other physicians have

The first of these was the discovery of the nature of the electric fluid, which was first made known by the experiments of the celebrated Dr. Franklin. He discovered that the electric fluid was a substance which could be attracted and repelled by certain bodies, and that it could be communicated from one body to another. He also discovered that the electric fluid was a substance which could be attracted and repelled by certain bodies, and that it could be communicated from one body to another.

The second of these was the discovery of the nature of the magnetic fluid, which was first made known by the experiments of the celebrated Dr. Franklin. He discovered that the magnetic fluid was a substance which could be attracted and repelled by certain bodies, and that it could be communicated from one body to another. He also discovered that the magnetic fluid was a substance which could be attracted and repelled by certain bodies, and that it could be communicated from one body to another.

The third of these was the discovery of the nature of the caloric fluid, which was first made known by the experiments of the celebrated Dr. Franklin. He discovered that the caloric fluid was a substance which could be attracted and repelled by certain bodies, and that it could be communicated from one body to another. He also discovered that the caloric fluid was a substance which could be attracted and repelled by certain bodies, and that it could be communicated from one body to another.

The fourth of these was the discovery of the nature of the luminous fluid, which was first made known by the experiments of the celebrated Dr. Franklin. He discovered that the luminous fluid was a substance which could be attracted and repelled by certain bodies, and that it could be communicated from one body to another. He also discovered that the luminous fluid was a substance which could be attracted and repelled by certain bodies, and that it could be communicated from one body to another.

located in Newport, remaining for a longer or shorter period, among whom may be named Dr. Elijah Cooper, a native of Walpole, and a kinsman of the Croydon Coopers. He graduated at Dartmouth college, and was in successful practice here a couple of years, but left, in 1825, for a larger field, which he found at Newark, Ohio, where he acquired a good medical reputation, and amassed a fortune. He was twice married: in 1825, to Caroline, eldest daughter of Nicholas Farwell, of Claremont, by whom he had seven children. She died in 1847. His second marriage was with her sister Mary. In September, 1854, Dr. Cooper, his wife, their daughter, four years old, and a servant in the family, all perished of cholera. The second daughter of Dr. Cooper married Maj. Jno. L. Farwell, cashier of the Claremont National Bank.

In 1843, Dr. J. W. Baker, whose father was a physician, and in practice at Plainfield, came here, but left at the close of one year for Meriden, where he was in good business until 1854, when he moved to Davenport, Iowa, his present residence.

In the autumn of 1875, Dr. J. P. Elkins came from Wilmot to Newport, with the purpose of permanent settlement; but such were the inducements presented by former friends for his return, that he complied with their wishes, and left the following spring.

In the summer of 1876, Dr. W. P. Swett, a son of Rev. Dr. Swett, of the diocese of Vermont, and a graduate of the university at Burlington, opened an office here, but remained a few months only. His present field of practice is Harwinton, Conn.

Dr. Thos. B. Sanborn, son of Dr. Thos. Sanborn, deceased, a native of this town, was educated at the Colby academy, New London, studied his profession with his father, and graduated at the Bellevue Medical College, New York. He commenced practice here in 1877, taking his father's office, with prospects favorable to a permanent abiding-place.

Dr. Herbert D. Gould, son of Jesse N. Gould, of Weare, was born July 4, 1854. He was educated at the Francestown academy, studied his profession with Dr. H. E. Spaulding, of Hingham, Mass., attended lectures at Dartmouth college and Boston the history of the world, as it is now, and as it was, and as it will be, is a subject of great importance, and one which has attracted the attention of many of the greatest minds of all ages. The history of the world is not only a record of the past, but a guide to the future. It shows us the mistakes of our ancestors, and the successes of our forefathers. It teaches us the lessons of experience, and the value of wisdom. It is a book which should be read by every man, woman, and child, for it is the key to the understanding of our world, and the source of our knowledge.

The history of the world is a vast and complex subject, and one which has been the subject of many different theories and opinions. Some people believe that the world was created in a single day, and that it has been the same ever since. Others believe that the world has been created in a series of stages, and that it is still in the process of being created. Still others believe that the world is a product of chance, and that it has no purpose or meaning.

However, there is one thing that is certain: the history of the world is a story of progress. It is a story of the human race, and of the things that we have accomplished. It is a story of the struggles and the triumphs, of the failures and the successes. It is a story of the human spirit, and of the power of our minds. It is a story of the world, and of the things that we have learned from it.

The history of the world is a book which should be read by every man, woman, and child, for it is the key to the understanding of our world, and the source of our knowledge. It is a book which should be read with care and attention, for it is a book which contains the secrets of the universe, and the mysteries of life. It is a book which should be read with a sense of awe and wonder, for it is a book which tells us of the greatness of our world, and the power of our minds.

A large number of natives and inhabitants of Newport have become physicians, and have settled elsewhere. For an account of them, see List of Graduates, also Biography.

CHAPTER VIII.

NECROLOGICAL.

BY DR. J. L. SWETT.

FROM the first settlement of Newport, in 1766, to 1824, there are no recorded statistics of the diseases or the mortality of the town, from which an accurate estimate can be made. Prior to the year 1800, the population numbered but a few hundreds. These mostly belonged to the early and middle periods of life; and the only unusual and alarming sickness, now known to have occurred, was in 1783, and resulted from an epidemic of a low form of fever, called at the time putrid fever, the stricken ones becoming early prostrated, and many of the cases passing rapidly to a fatal termination. The adjoining towns shared in this visitation; and for several months a general gloom pervaded the whole vicinity, inasmuch as great mortality followed, especially with the young.

The next most notable epidemic commenced in the winter of 1812, and continued until the summer of 1813. It was called "spotted" or "petechial fever," the cerebro-spinal meningitis of the present day. It was here, as in the neighboring towns, alarming and fatal, baffling, in a great measure, the best efforts and highest skill of physicians. Strong men and women, well in the morning, and engaged in their ordinary pursuits, were attacked during the day, and in the evening numbered with the dead. Fear of the malady was so great that much difficulty was encountered in securing proper attentions for the sick. Under these circumstances, a town-meeting was called, for deliberation, and resulted in an appropriation of one hundred dollars to procure medical counsel from abroad, and six hundred dollars to supply the needs of the destitute, and to remunerate for medical services. A board of health was also appointed, whose duties were, to adopt hygienic measures, look after the sick, and see that the appropriation was judiciously expended. It was composed of Phineas Chapin, Uriah Wilcox, William Cheney, Jonathan Brown, Sylvanus Richards, and Philip W.

Kibby. During the prevalence of this epidemic, a large number of persons fell victims to the disease.

In the summer and autumn of 1825, typhoid fever, of a very grave form, visited the town, pervaded nearly every part, and in an unusual number of instances proved fatal, making the mortality of that year fifty-two, or four times as great as that of the preceding.

In the winter, spring, and early summer of 1840, scarlatina, called "canker rash," was widespread throughout the town. For a time, a large proportion of the cases were of a malignant type, and in several instances death supervened on the day of attack. The whole number of cases that occurred exceeded three hundred, and in twenty-five of these the result was fatal. This same affection, in milder form, has with frequency presented itself since 1840; but with the exception of 1858, and again in 1875, it has not been attended with great mortality.

Small-pox has twice appeared in town,—first, in 1833, when Jared Lane and a daughter of Aaron Buell died from this cause, and again, in the spring of 1840, in the family of Capt. Seth Richards, there being two cases of variola and two of varioloid, all of which recovered.

Diphtheria was first known in this vicinity in 1854, and for a number of years added considerably to the mortality of the town. Since that period the cases presenting have been of milder character, and more easily controlled.

The other diseases prevalent have been such as are common to all New England. Annually, typhoid fever has made its visitation, but varying greatly in gravity and fatality in different years. Cholera infantum, dysentery, and other affections of the alimentary canal, have usually appeared each summer and autumn, and have produced a larger mortality among children than any other class of diseases; while pulmonary affections, as bronchitis, pneumonia, and consumption, have been constantly developing, and removing their victims from our midst. The mortality from consumption alone, during the last forty years, has been twenty per cent. of all those who have died beyond ten years of age.

The accompanying necrological statistics cover a period of fifty-three years, the first thirteen of which were taken from records made by the Rev. John Woods, and those of the last forty from records made by the writer. The population of the town has been slowly, but gradually, on the increase during the more than half a century covered by the table, which, according to the United States census, was, in 1830, 1,913; in 1840, 1,958; in 1850, 2,020; in 1860, 2,078; and in 1870, 2,163. Since the latter period, by reason of railroad facilities, the gain has been more rapid, so that the present population is estimated to be 2,500.

The whole mortality that occurred from January, 1824, to January, 1877, a period of fifty-three years, is 1,867, giving an average of thirty-five deaths to each year, and a fraction. Of the whole number, eight hundred and twenty-six were males, and nine hundred were females, while the sex of one hundred and forty-one is unknown, they being very young children. Five hundred and forty-two died below ten years of age, with an average existence to each of about two years; and five hundred and sixty-seven attained to the age of sixty years and upwards; three hundred and seventy-two, to seventy and upwards; one hundred and seventy, to eighty and upwards; forty-one, to ninety and upwards; and one exceeded one hundred years. Of those who have reached the greatest longevity since January, 1837, may be mentioned the following:

Mrs. Anna Wakefield, 91 years.	Mrs. Mary Hall, 94 years.
Mr. Ezra Parmelee, 92 years.	Mrs. Mary Pike, 92 years.
Mrs. Ezra Parmelee, 91 years.	Mr. Joel Kelsey, 99 years, 7 mos.

CHAPTER IX.

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS IN NEWPORT.

BY H. G. CARLETON.

IN giving the following history of the newspaper press in Newport, it may be proper to state that the writer has been connected with the Argus and Spectator most of the time for more than forty-six years; that he was acquainted with all but two of its former editors and proprietors; and that the facts given below, which he was not fully conversant with, are taken from the files of the paper, and may therefore be considered reliable.

In August, 1823, CYRUS BARTON, a native of Croydon, N. H., and a practical printer, established a newspaper in Claremont, called the Claremont Spectator. It contained five columns to a page, and was in size about 20 by 25 inches. Mr. Barton filled the position of editor, besides doing much labor on the mechanical department of the paper. The first number of this paper was issued Aug. 29, 1823, and the last number was issued Sept. 3, 1824. In January, 1825, Mr. Barton removed his printing-office to Newport, and established the New Hampshire Spectator. The first number printed in Newport is dated January 12, 1825. The removal of the paper from Claremont to Newport was made with the expectation that the latter would be the shire town of the new county of Sullivan, then being formed.

In September, 1826, DUNBAR ALDRICH, a printer from Cheshire county, became connected with Mr. Barton in the publication of the paper, the firm being Aldrich & Barton. In April, 1829, Mr. Aldrich retired from the firm; and Mr. Barton associated with him B. B. FRENCH and CYRUS METCALF, the firm being Barton, French & Metcalf, Mr. French being an attorney-at-law and clerk of the courts for Sullivan county, and Mr. Metcalf a practical printer. In July, of the same year, Mr. Barton withdrew from the paper and removed to Concord to take the editorial charge of the New Hampshire Patriot, the Hon. Isaac Hill, the editor of that paper, retiring from the concern. Messrs. French & Metcalf continued the publication of the paper about one year, when Mr. Metcalf withdrew from the firm, and Mr. French formed a business connection with SIMON BROWN, a brother-in-law and a practical printer, the firm being French & Brown, Mr. French editing the paper, besides performing his duty as clerk of the courts, and Mr. Brown taking charge of the mechanical department of the business. In 1834, Mr. French removed to Washington city, and Mr. Brown continued as its sole editor and proprietor.

In the same year, the Argus, then printed at Claremont, was removed to Newport, and in the following year was united with the Spectator. Its name was changed to Argus and Spectator, Mr. Brown retiring from the paper, and EDMUND BURKE becoming its sole editor.

In 1838, HENRY E. BALDWIN and WILLIAM ENGLISH, both practical printers, and both former workmen in the office, purchased the concern, and became its editors and proprietors. In a few months, Mr. English sold his interest in the paper to SAMUEL C. BALDWIN, and it was published by H. E. & S. C. Baldwin. In January, 1840, HENRY G. CARLETON and MATTHEW HARVEY purchased the paper, since which time, now more than thirty-eight years, and more than two thirds of its whole existence, it has been published by Carleton & Harvey.

As will be seen, the paper has passed through many hands since its commencement, particularly in the first fifteen years of its existence,—not an uncommon thing in the history of the newspaper press of this country. Most of those who have been connected with it have passed away, although not until they had become well known, and had exerted no small share of influence in the political world.

Cyrus Barton, the founder of the paper, removed to Concord when a young man, and became editor of the New Hampshire

Patriot, the leading Democratic paper of the state. He has served as councillor, state senator, member of the constitutional convention, in 1850, to revise the state constitution, and also U. S. marshal for New Hampshire. He fell dead while delivering a political speech at Loudon, in 1855, at the age of about 58 years.

Of Dunbar Aldrich, the partner of Mr. Barton, but little is known. He was but a short time connected with the paper. He was a practical printer by trade, and came to Newport from Cheshire county.

Cyrus Metcalf, connected with Mr. French in the publication of the Spectator, was a native of Canada. After his retirement from the paper he removed to New York, and was employed for a long time in the office of the New York Tribune. He died but a few years since.

B. B. French removed from Newport to Washington city in 1834, and was in the government employ most of the time until his death, in the summer of 1870. He filled the important positions of clerk of the U. S. house of representatives and commissioner of public buildings, and held other places of trust and responsibility.

Simon Brown, after his retirement from the Spectator, in 1835, removed to Concord, and from thence, after a short residence there, to Washington city, where he became librarian of the house of representatives. After a residence there of some years, he removed to Concord, Mass., and engaged in agricultural pursuits. He was editor of the Hingham Gazette, and for many years, until his death, editor of the New England Farmer. He was a member of the board of agriculture, and a trustee of the reform school; served in the legislature of Massachusetts, and in 1855 became lieutenant-governor of the state. He died in February, 1873, at the age of about 71 years.

Edmund Burke, for several years editor of the Argus, was elected to congress in 1839, was reelected in 1841 and 1843, serving six years in the house of representatives. In 1845 he was appointed commissioner of patents by President Polk, and retired on a change of the national administration, after serving four years. In 1849 he became associate editor of the Washington Union, at that time the leading Democratic paper in the country. He is now (1878) extensively engaged in the practice of law, and is the only man now alive, with the exception of the present proprietors,—Carleton & Harvey,—who has ever had any pecuniary interest in the paper.

Henry E. Baldwin was the successor of Mr. Burke in the editorial department of the paper. He was a practical printer by trade, having served his apprenticeship in the office. He filled the offices of clerk of the state senate, register of deeds and of probate for the county of Sullivan, inspector in the Boston custom-house during the administration of President Polk, and a government clerk in Washington, where he died in February, 1857.

William English, a short time the associate of Henry E. Baldwin, was for some time city editor of the Boston Post. He was also private secretary to Gov. Morton, of Massachusetts, while he was collector of the port of Boston. He was a native of Ireland, noted for his rapidity as a compositor, and was a young man of ability. He died in January, 1849.

Samuel C. Baldwin, an associate with his brother, Henry E. Baldwin, in the publication of the paper, was editor of the Plymouth Rock, at Plymouth, Mass., and the Laconia Democrat, at Laconia, N. H. He was also clerk of the court for the county of Belknap. He died in 1861.

Henry G. Carleton, one of the present publishers of the Argus, of the firm of Carleton & Harvey, has been connected with the paper, as one of its editors and publishers, now (1878) nearly thirty-nine years. He has been register of deeds and of probate for the county of Sullivan, and has represented the town of Newport in the state legislature. He is a director in the First National Bank, and is a trustee and the president of the savings bank.

Matthew Harvey, one of the present editors and publishers of the paper, of the firm of Carleton & Harvey, has been connected with the paper, as editor and publisher, nearly thirty-nine years. The firm commenced business Jan. 1, 1840, being the oldest newspaper firm in the state. He was register of deeds for the county of Sullivan for a period of five years. He was also assistant marshal of the state to take the United States census in 1860.

In addition to the above, there are others who have learned the trade of printing in the office, who have reached positions of trust and responsibility. Of the earlier apprentices are Roswell Elmer and Horace Parmelee, who served their apprenticeships with Mr. Barton, the founder of the paper. The former was for some time editor of the North Carolina Spectator, afterwards a cotton planter in Louisiana, and is now living near Cincinnati, Ohio. Mr. Horace Parmelee left the business and engaged in trade. He is now in business in New York.

William W. Forsaith worked as a journeyman printer in Boston for some years, when he went to California, where he died some twenty years since.

Mr. Harvey Richards, who served his apprenticeship with H. E. & S. C. Baldwin and with Carleton & Harvey, left the business when a young man, and is now engaged in trade in Minnesota, where he has been quite successful.

Mr. Virgil C. Stevens, who also served his apprenticeship with H. E. & S. C. Baldwin and Carleton & Harvey, went to California when a young man, and was for some time connected with one of the leading papers in San Francisco. He is now assistant foreman in the office of the Boston Daily Advertiser.

Mr. Jacob W. Wheeler, who served his apprenticeship with Carleton & Harvey, after working at his trade as a journeyman printer for a short time, became editor of a leading Democratic paper in Davenport, Iowa, but, his health failing, he retired from the paper, and returned to Newport, his native town, where he died in 1853, at the age of twenty-five years.

Mr. Parmenus H. Whitcomb, who served his apprenticeship with Carleton & Harvey, after working as a journeyman for some years, purchased the Dartmouth Press, at Hanover, N. H., and is printing the Dartmouth, a monthly devoted to the interests of Dartmouth college. He also does much other printing connected with the college.

Mr. Benjamin F. Haven, an apprentice to Carleton & Harvey, after working at his trade for some years, enlisted in the 9th Regiment of the N. H. Volunteers during the late rebellion, and, after serving until near the close of the war, was taken prisoner, and died in Danville, Va., in November, 1864.

Mr. George Johnson, an apprentice to Carleton & Harvey, on the completion of his trade commenced to study for the ministry, and, after the usual course, was ordained, and soon joined the Methodist Conference in Vermont, from whence he removed to the state of Minnesota and connected himself with the Congregational denomination, where he is now laboring as a home missionary.

Mr. Henry Stevens, an apprentice to Carleton & Harvey, established himself in business at Westborough, Mass., where he was meeting with much success, when he was taken away by death in 1871.

Frank H. Carleton, son of H. G. Carleton, one of the present publishers of the Argus and Spectator, learned the trade of printing in the office, but afterwards graduated at Dartmouth college, in the class of 1872. While in college he was a frequent contributor to the columns of the Argus and Spectator, and other papers. He is a lawyer in St. Paul, Minn., and clerk of the municipal court of that city.

Mr. Arthur S. Paul, of Unity, son of John Paul, Esq., of that town, entered the office of Carleton & Harvey, in April, 1873, served his time of three years as an apprentice, and, after working as a journeyman in the office one year, went to San Antonio, in Texas, where he is now (1878) employed in his profession.

There have been other apprentices in the office since the commencement of the paper, but none that we now recollect who have served a full apprenticeship.

On the removal of the paper from Claremont to Newport, in 1825, it took strong ground in favor of the election of Andrew Jackson for President, and has ever since been Democratic in politics, adhering to the party in victory and in defeat.

The Farmers' Advocate and Political Adventurer, a paper edited by HUBBARD NEWTON, Esq., was published weekly by H. & C. H. E. Newton, in 1830 and 1831, advocating the election of Henry Clay to the Presidency, and the Whig doctrines, in opposition to Andrew Jackson and the Democratic party, and was continued for one year. In 1832 and 1833 the Northern Farmer and Horticulturist, a journal devoted to farming and horticulture, was edited and published for two years by the same parties.

REV. JOHN WILCOX, as far back as 1834, had a press in town. He printed an edition of the New Testament, Webster's Spelling Book, the New England Primer, and an Encyclopedia.

The Sullivan Republican was published by an association of the leading Republicans of this and neighboring towns, and was devoted to the interests of the Republican party. The first number was issued in January, 1859, and it was discontinued in the spring of 1861. The Hon. L. W. Barton, of this town, was the managing agent. It was edited by Hon. W. H. H. Allen (see Lawyers), and printed by E. H. Cheney, who afterwards removed to Lebanon, purchased the Free Press, and became its editor and publisher.

The New Hampshire Insurance Journal was the title of a monthly publication issued by Robert C. Osgood in 1874. It was soon discontinued.

Among those natives of Newport more or less prominently connected with the press in different parts of the country, not mentioned above, are the following: George E. Jenks, Edward A. Jenks, Bela W. Jenks, Milton Foss, Henry H. Metcalf, Andrew J. Gilmore, James Kelley, George B. Wheeler Wm. F. Newton.

CHAPTER X.

BANKS.

BY FREDERICK W. LEWIS, ESQ.

THE Sugar River Bank was incorporated Jan. 7, 1853, with a capital stock of $50,000. So full was the faith of the public in its success, that more than twice the amount of capital needed was at once subscribed, and a committee was appointed to apportion the stock among the subscribers. On the 19th day of February following, Ralph Metcalf, Edmund Burke, Amasa Edes, Thomas A. Twichell, Thomas W. Gilmore, Amasa Hall, and Dexter Richards were chosen directors. On the same day, the organization of the bank was completed by the election of Ralph Metcalf, president, and Paul J. Wheeler, cashier. The bank was opened for business on the 10th day of June, 1853.

In 1858, Mr. Metcalf, having removed from town, resigned the office of president, and Thomas W. Gilmore was elected. Mr. Gilmore continued to hold the office, and to discharge the duties thereof with marked ability and scrupulous fidelity, until failing health compelled him, in 1875, to decline further election. On the retirement of Mr. Gilmore, Dexter Richards, the present incumbent, was chosen president.

Paul J. Wheeler held the office of cashier until his decease, Sept. 19, 1862. On the 7th of October following, Frederick W. Lewis was chosen cashier, and continued to hold the office until the reorganization of the bank as a national bank, Feb. 17, 1865, when he was elected cashier of the national bank, and has continued to hold the office until the present time.

April 24, 1865, the capital stock was increased from $50,000 to $100,000. The present board of officers is as follows: Dexter Richards, president; F. W. Lewis, cashier; Dexter Richards, Worthen Hall, Henry G. Carleton, Daniel R. Hall, Joshua W. Booth, John P. Knowlton, and Edmund Wheeler, directors; Dexter Richards, F. W. Lewis, and H. G. Carleton, financial committee; Edmund Wheeler, Dexter Richards, and Daniel R. Hall, examining committee.

Besides the officers already named, the following persons have been members of the board of directors at various times: Amasa Edes, Oliver Booth, Horace Metcalf, and Daniel J. Warner.

The dividends, for thirteen years since its organization as a national bank, have averaged $9\frac{65}{100}$ per cent. per annum; and the bank now holds a handsome surplus.

The NEWPORT SAVINGS BANK was incorporated July 1, 1868, and was organized and commenced business in September of the same year. The first board of officers consisted of the following persons: Dexter Richards, Henry G. Carleton, Amasa Edes, Shepherd L. Bowers, Edmund Wheeler, Isaac A. Reed, Albert S. Wait, Levi W. Barton, Samuel H. Edes, Francis Boardman, Benjamin F. Sawyer, Edmund Burke, John Blanchard, and Harvey Huntoon, trustees; Dexter Richards, Henry G. Carleton, and Amasa Edes, loaning agents; Edmund Wheeler, Francis Boardman, and Isaac A. Reed, auditors; Dexter Richards, president; Henry G. Carleton, vice-president; Frederick W. Lewis, secretary and treasurer.

This bank has made semi-annual dividends of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. from its organization; it also made an extra dividend in April, 1873, amounting to $1\frac{65}{100}$ per cent. per annum up to that time. In April, 1878, it reported,—Deposits, \$321,500; guaranty fund, \$5,500; surplus, \$5,694.18.

The present board of officers consists of the following: Henry G. Carleton, president; Worthen Hall, vice-president; Frederick W. Lewis, secretary and treasurer; Dexter Richards, H. G. Carleton, and Francis Boardman, loaning agents; Francis Boardman, E. C. Converse, and F. A. Rawson, auditors.

CHAPTER XI.

COUNTY.

THE towns now included in Sullivan county once formed a part of Cheshire. The old county being so long, the people had been subjected to a large amount of unnecessary travel and expense; and one term of the court had for many years been holden at Keene and the other at Charlestown, the better to accommodate the public. A law was passed, Dec. 28, 1824, removing the May term of the supreme court of judicature from Charlestown to Newport. June 23, 1826, the legislature submitted to the several towns of the county the question of dividing the county. July 5, 1827, the act incorporating the county of Sullivan was passed, to take effect the following September. The question whether Claremont or Newport should be the shire town, submitted to the people at the same time with that of the formation of the county, was decided in favor of Newport by a majority of 3,728 votes.

That Newport was made the shire town of the county, even after this decisive vote, was in a good measure due to the efforts of Col. William Cheney, who, almost single-handed and alone, combated an imposing array of legal talent in the legislature, whose interests were in the western portion of the county, and won the victory.

COURT-HOUSE. At a meeting held Jan. 13, 1825, the town voted, by a voice nearly unanimous, to raise the sum of $2,000 to assist in building a court-house and town-hall building, the remaining $1,500 to be supplied by individual subscriptions, the two sums being required to meet the estimated expense of the building. The lot on which the building was erected was purchased of Aaron Nettleton, Jr., for the sum of $410. A building committee, consisting of Col. William Cheney, James Breck, Esq., and Col. James D. Walcott, were appointed to superintend the work. On the 11th day of February, 1826, Oliver Jenks, James D. Walcott, and David Allen, selectmen of Newport, and Salma Hale, clerk of the court, certified that the new court-house was built and ready for occupation. This building, after several modifications, continued to be occupied by the county until 1873, when it was deeded to the town, and the court was removed to the new building.

NEW TOWN-HALL AND COURT-HOUSE. For a long time the town, in its frequent large gatherings, had suffered great inconvenience from the want of a hall with sufficient capacity to accommodate the crowd, and especially so on occasions of unusual interest, which drew together large numbers. This need was felt by all our people; and when, after the close of the war, the state assumed the debts of the towns, the proportion which fell to this town being some $16,000, this was thought to be the opportune moment in which to build the long-wished-for hall, as it would save the expense of collection and cause less inconvenience to the public. Accordingly a meeting was called, and various plans and estimates presented. After a long and somewhat exciting controversy, a location and a plan were agreed upon; and the town voted, Nov. 21, 1872, to erect the building. Frederick W. Lewis, Levi W. Barton, Shepherd L. Bowers, Francis Boardman, Martin L. Whittier, and William Kelley were appointed a committee to take charge of the work. The site on which it stands was occupied by the residence of Dr. J. L. Swett, for which they paid him $6,000. The plan of the work was drawn by Edward Dow, architect, of Concord; and the building was erected by W. L. Dow & Co., of this town, at a cost, when completed, of nearly $40,000. It is considered one of the finest edifices of the kind in the state. The entire expense was paid by Newport, Claremont having pledged itself to furnish a suitable building and safes without expense to the county, provided the courts should be removed to that town. In part compensation, however, for this, the town had the old court-house and grounds, which they needed for graded school purposes, and also the former safe and grand jury rooms.

JAIL. The old jail at Charlestown continued to be occupied by the county until April 1, 1842, when it was set on fire by a

The history of the world is a vast and complex subject, encompassing the lives and actions of countless individuals across different cultures and time periods. It is a story of human progress, struggle, and achievement, shaped by the forces of nature and the choices of men. The study of history allows us to understand the patterns of human behavior and the consequences of our actions, providing a valuable perspective on the present and a guide for the future.

In the early days of human civilization, the world was a place of mystery and wonder. The first humans were nomadic, living in small groups and relying on hunting and gathering for their survival. As time passed, they began to settle in one place, building villages and cities. This led to the development of agriculture, which allowed them to produce food in surplus and support a larger population. The invention of writing marked a significant milestone in human history, enabling the recording of events and the transmission of knowledge across generations.

The ancient world was a time of great achievement and discovery. The Egyptians built magnificent pyramids and developed a complex system of hieroglyphs. The Greeks made significant contributions to philosophy, science, and art, laying the foundation for Western civilization. The Romans expanded their empire across Europe and North Africa, creating a vast and powerful nation. The fall of the Roman Empire led to the Dark Ages, a period of relative stagnation and decline.

The Middle Ages were a time of great faith and devotion. The Church played a central role in society, providing a sense of purpose and direction. The Crusades were a series of religious wars fought between Christians and Muslims for control of the Holy Land. The Renaissance was a period of great cultural and intellectual revival, marked by the rediscovery of classical learning and the emergence of new ideas and art forms.

The modern world is a time of great progress and achievement. The Industrial Revolution brought about a rapid increase in production and a new era of economic growth. The discovery of electricity and the internal combustion engine transformed the way we live and work. The 20th century was a time of great conflict and change, marked by the two world wars and the Cold War. The space age has opened up new frontiers for exploration and discovery, and the future holds great promise for the human race.

notorious robber by the name of Hicks, and burned. The same season a new one was built in this town. It was erected by the Hon. Nathan Mudgett, at a cost of $3,300. It was remodelled, under the direction of the county commissioners, in 1876, at an additional cost of some $5,000.

COUNTY SAFE. The old County Safe building was erected for the county in 1843, by Jonathan M. Wilmarth, Esq., at a cost of $1,100. The town voted, Aug. 1, 1843, "to lease to the county the south-west corner of the court-house common, for the purpose of erecting county offices and safes, to be held so long as used for that purpose."

The citizens of Newport, at various times since the formation of the county, have held the following offices. Several of them, however, resided in other towns at the time of their election or appointment to office.

CLERKS OF THE COURT. Benjamin B. French, Thomas W. Gilmore, W. H. H. Allen, William F. Newton, George E. Dame.

SOLICITORS. Edmund Burke, Samuel H. Edes, Levi W. Barton.

SHERIFFS. David Allen, Frederick Claggett, Rufus P. Claggett.

COMMISSIONER. Francis Boardman.

REGISTERS OF DEEDS. Cyrus Barton, Calvin Wilcox, N. B. Cutting, Henry E. Baldwin, Henry G. Carleton, Matthew Harvey, John Towne, Levi W. Barton, Arthur H. Ingram, Elisha M. Kempton, William E. Brooks.

REGISTERS OF PROBATE. Aaron Nettleton, Jr., Ralph Metcalf, Henry E. Baldwin, Henry G. Carleton, Edward Wyman, Shepherd L. Bowers, George R. Brown.

CHAPTER XII.

MILLS.

GRIST-MILLS. The first settlers took care to provide themselves with early and ample mill accommodations, as will be seen by the following vote of the proprietors:

At an Adjourned Meeting holden on the 29th day of October, at the house of Zephaniah Clark afores^d by the Proprietors of Newport afores^d, Mr. Stephen Wilcocks, Moderator—

Voted that Benjamin Giles now Resident in Newport have One hundred Acres of Land, laid out by the Proprietors Committee to him his heirs and assigns for Ever, and to be so laid out as to secure to said Giles his heirs and Assigns that part of the East Branch of Great Sugar River so called near where s^d Giles is about to sett up a Corn Mill and a saw mill, so that said Giles may build a Damm aCross said River, with all the priviledge of said River, so far as is necessary for the benefit of s^d Mills with the land Adjoining said River so as to take in a Sufficiency of Land for to sett said Mills and what may be convenient around the same, and also to be so laid out as to take apart of the White Pine Timber, and also to Procure a Pair of Mill Stones for said Giles at said Mills. Also that said Giles have a Tax or Rate to the Value of Four days Labour on Each Proprietors Right or Share, the afores^d Grants given for s^d Giles's Encouragement towards his Building the aforesaid Mills in Newport afores^d.

The site selected on which to build the mill is the one now occupied by the Granite Mills of Coffin & Nourse. The mills were completed and ready for operation Sept. 24, 1768. The old mill-stones are still pointed out, and the single tree which constituted the original dam is now doing the same service to the present mills, and is in a good state of preservation. Previous to the completion of this undertaking, the milling was mainly done at Charlestown, which was reached by a rough road, leading over Pike hill. The mills and privilege were sold to Jeremiah Nettleton in 1779. They were afterwards owned by Ebenezer Merrit, Samuel Endicot, in 1812; Ruel Keith; and jointly by Amasa Edes, Joseph Sawyer, Jr., and S. S. Wilcox, who purchased them in 1836, at the time of the Mirick speculation, who, in 1867, sold to Coffin & Nourse, the present owners.

The village grist-mill was built previous to 1787. Daniel Dudley furnished the means, and John Dudley and Constant White superintended the construction. It was purchased by Roswell Kelsey, who sold it to William McAllister. It was rebuilt by Col. William Cheney in 1815. It has since been owned by Nathan Nettleton; Durkee & Cutting, 1826; Albert Wilcox; Wilcox & Whittemore; Edes, Wilcox & Breck, 1836; Benj. Farrington; J. & E. S. Barrett; Emerson & Booth; Augustus G. Savory; C. C. Shedd, 1865; Gerry Morgan, 1868; Horace Adams, 1869; Bennett & Woodbury, 1869; Bennett & Rowell, 1870; Bennett, Rowell & Wright, 1873; and now (1878) by Wright & Stockwell. The mill was burned in January, 1866, while owned by Mr. Shedd, and was rebuilt by Mr. Morgan some three years after. In 1870 this mill ground 19,000 bushels of grain, valued at $33,000.

The grist-mill on the Goshen Branch of Sugar river, originally built by Rev. Abijah Wines, son-in-law of Benj. Giles, who built the first mill, and subsequently owned by Reuben Bascom and Ezra Parmelee, previous to 1779, was on the south side of the river. It had one run of stones, and the power was applied to the wheel by means of a hollow log running from the top of the dam. Mr. Bascom sold his interest to Josiah Stevens. It was purchased by Reuben Bascom in 1791. It was rebuilt on the north side of the river by James Whipple and Samuel P. Hawes, previous to 1812. It has since been owned by Elisha Bascom, Reuben M. Call, Adams & Dummer, Henry Chapin, and Abijah W. Tenney. The original logs put in at the building of the dam are nearly two thirds of them still there, in a good state of preservation, where they have been for nearly or quite one hundred years.

Benjamin F. Haven had a grist-mill in operation for several years in the basement of his saw-mill at Northville, commencing in 1866.

Frank P. Rowell, in 1877, erected a steam grist-mill on Corn alley, near Railroad square, where he has ground a large amount of corn—about 12,000 bushels annually.

SAW-MILLS. The first saw-mill, built by Mr. Giles, has already been described in connection with his grist-mill. Mr. Ezra Parmelee sawed the first boards.

The Comstock saw-mill was built by Dea. Asa Hurd, about 1830. It has since been owned and operated by Josiah Hurd, Bascom & Tenney, Oliver Comstock, Montgomery Craige, Coffin & Nourse, and King & Small. In 1870, King & Small produced 220,000 feet of boards and 100,000 shingles.

Roswell Kelsey, Jr., built the dam at the Sugar River Mills for a saw-mill. The mill was placed on the south side of the stream, so as to better accommodate the large tracts of timber on East mountain. It was sold to James D. Walcott in 1812, and was rebuilt by Jonathan Cutting on the north side of the river, and occupied by him until 1839, when it was burned.

The village saw-mill, built by Daniel Dudley, stood on the north side of the river until 1815, when the grist-mill was rebuilt, and the saw-mill was placed where it now stands, on the south side of the dam. This mill has been owned since by Jonathan Cutting, 1826; Seth Richards; Albert Wilcox; Jacob Reddington, 1837; Garry Tompkins, 1849; George E. Wilmarth, 1858; and by Daniel Nettleton. This mill manufactured 550,000 feet of lumber and 150,000 shingles in 1870. It was burned, Sept. 22, 1878.

The Staniels saw-mill was owned and run in connection with the grist-mill. In 1836, it was purchased by Stephen Call and Frederick Claggett. It has been owned since by A. W. Tenney, John Wilcox, Hiram Staniels, and David E. Carr. The latter, in 1870, produced 100,000 feet of boards, 25,000 laths, and 15,000 shingles.

Ephraim Towner, one of the earliest settlers, had a saw-mill on Towner brook, near the junction of the Goshen and Break-Neck Hill roads.

Allen's mill, at Northville, was built by Samuel W. Allen in 1871. The Richardson mill and canal, at the same power, were built in 1836 by Samuel Larned & Co. Allen's mill, when operating at its full capacity, can produce 7,000 feet of boards, 9,000 shingles, and 15,000 laths per day.

Ichabod Morse, soon after his arrival in town, built a saw-mill near the mouth of Morse brook. The mill was shortly carried away by the high water.

The Haven mill at Northville was built by widow Joel Wakefield, in the early part of the present century. It was rebuilt by James Haven in 1831, and has since been owned by his son, B. F. Haven.

The saw-mill, dam, and canal at Kelleyville were built by Israel Kelley in 1827. He was assisted by the contributions of some sixty-five of his neighbors, who were interested in the enterprise. The mill has since been operated by William and Franklin Kelley, his sons, and by Nehemiah Dodge and David G. Fowler. In 1870, Mr. Fowler sawed 100,000 feet of boards, and made 200,000 shingles.

Nathan Hurd, in the earlier days, had a saw-mill opposite the Endicot farm, which was carried away by a freshet and never rebuilt.

Randall's mill was built by Lewis W. Randall and Carroll W. Peabody. It was soon purchased by Mr. Randall, who, after operating it for several years, sold to Ira F. Chandler, its present owner. In 1870, Mr. C. produced 150,000 feet of boards, 150,000 feet of lumber, and 75,000 laths.

The saw-mill in the north-west part of the town, on Perry brook, has been owned by Henry Chapin, Ezekiel Powers, and Abijah W. Tenney.

The saw-mill in the north-east part of the town, on Long Pond brook, was built by Peter Wakefield, who sold it to Stephen Reed, a son-in-law, who rebuilt it, and from whom it fell to his son Jackson Reed. Mr. Reed sawed, in 1870, 100,000 feet of boards.

CHAPTER XIII.

HOTELS.

THE favorable position of Newport, situated as it is in the valley of Sugar river, and at the confluence of its two branches north and south, has enabled it to enjoy much of the advantages of the through travel, as well as a wide local patronage; and hence hotel-keeping has always been an important and prosperous branch of business. Its palmiest days were prior to the introduction of railroads, when an immense amount of travel and freighting, by stage and teams, passed through this town on its way to and from market. The accommodation of fashionable summer boarders from our cities seems to give promise of another harvest for that calling.

The first mention we find of a public house is among the records of the proprietors' clerk, where the proprietors adjourned Oct. 13, 1767, "to meet on the 16th inst., at 12 o'clock, at the house of Zephaniah Clark, innholder, in said Newport." Tradition says it was a humble log cabin, standing near the residence of Mr. Claggett, on the Unity road. That spot continued to be the favorite location for a hotel until after the building of the Croydon turnpike, and the consequent transfer of business to the present village. The house of Mr. Claggett was built by John Lane, and occupied by him, David Lyon, and Ruel Keith, as a tavern.

Benjamin Bragg had a tavern at the Fairbanks place in 1782. The first building, made of logs, was burned, and a two-story framed house was erected in its place, and used as a tavern. He sold out to Phineas Wilcox, who continued the business at the same place.

The first framed house within the limits of the present village stood upon the site of the present residence of J. H. Hunton. It was built by Isaac Reddington, and was designed for a tavern and store, and was occupied by him as such in 1793 and 1794. It was sold to Jesse Wilcox, Jr., who continued the same business from 1797 until the time of his death.

The F. Claggett house, the second one north of the Congregational church, was built by Gordon Buel for a hotel. It was kept by him in 1811, and afterwards by Sylvanus Richards, Seth Richards, John Silver, in 1826, and by J. Black. It was known as the "Rising Sun."

"The Newport Coffee-House," now the house of Mr. W. A. F. Ladd, standing nearer the river than now, and fronting south, was built by Sargent Heath, in 1825, for a tavern, and was kept by him for a number of years.

Luther Delano kept a tavern for a while at the Tontine, on the east side of the common.

Peter Wakefield kept a tavern in the north part of the town, in 1798, near Baptist hill.

Ichabod Morse kept a tavern at the G. P. Haven place. It stood upon what was then the Cornish turnpike, which was new and much travelled.

Willard Wakefield and J. Rice had a public house at Northville for a number of years.

Sylvanus Richards kept a tavern for many years in the west part of the town, on the S. H. Cutting farm, where he had a nice place, and one of the very largest stocks in town. A Mr. Rice also kept a tavern on the same road, but nearer the Claremont line.

The house of Mr. B. Marshall, on the new road to Claremont, was used for many years as a tavern, commencing with the opening of the road. It was known as the "Half-way House." It was kept first by Stephen Perry, and afterwards by Mr. Kennerston, Mr. Walker, and Harvey Bingham.

Col. David Fisher had a tavern at the foot of Claremont hill in 1794; and Col. William Cheney was licensed to keep a tavern at the same place in 1813.

Hon. David Allen kept a tavern for many years at his place on the Goshen road, where Mrs. Page now resides, commencing in 1811. It is still remembered with pleasure by the once weary travellers who enjoyed its home comforts and bountiful table.

Joseph Buel had a tavern in 1793 at the L. W. Darling place on the East mountain.

The Isaac Quimby house, at Kelleyville, was occupied as a tavern for several years. It was kept by Jonathan Comstock.

A public house was kept for a number of years at the Goldthwait place, on the old Croydon turnpike, by James White.

Asa Hurd kept tavern at the S. S. Wilcox house in the east part of the town.

The Newport House was built and kept by Col. William Cheney in 1814, and was also kept for a while by Col. Luther Delano. It was shortly after purchased and greatly enlarged by Capt. Joel Nettleton, and kept by him for more than twenty years. Since his day it has been kept by Parker Nettleton, James Kendall, Stephen Day, W. C. Colston, Samuel Emmons, Milton Glidden, Ira M. Clark, David B. Jones, Cross & Ayer, and J. & H. G. P. Cross. The original edifice was burned in 1860, and the present structure was erected the same year by the Messrs. Cross, assisted by liberal contributions from the citizens of the village, at a cost of $10,000. It was inaugurated with a most brilliant leap-year party on the 14th of December of that year. It was purchased by E. L. Putney, its present owner, in March, 1866. The French roof and observatory were put upon it by him in 1871, and the large new addition at the north in 1874, nearly doubling its capacity. It was leased to H. A. Averill in October, 1872, for a short time. It has always received its share of patronage from the time of its erection by Mr. Cheney. It is three stories high, with a Mansard roof, 120 feet long, 44 feet deep, and has 100 rooms.

The Eagle hotel, now Eagle block, was built by James Breck and Josiah Forsaith, Esqs., in 1826. It was first kept by George Sparhawk, and subsequently by James Cameron, John Doughty, John Preston, John Silver, Samuel Emmons, Matthew Parker, Asa Richardson, S. Day, Jr., Joseph Nutting, D. W. Watkins, Jonathan Silsby, and C. & H. A. Averill. It was purchased by S. H. Edes, and converted into a business block, in 1856. It enjoyed its greatest popularity with the fashionable public, who constantly thronged it with rides and dances,

The first of these is the fact that the British Empire was at its greatest extent in 1913, covering more than a quarter of the world's land area and a third of its population. This was the result of a combination of factors, including the industrial revolution, the expansion of the British navy, and the policy of 'salutary neglect' which allowed the colonies to develop their own economies while remaining loyal to the mother country.

The second factor was the policy of 'salutary neglect', which was a deliberate strategy to encourage the growth of the colonies' economies. By allowing the colonies to trade with other nations and to develop their own industries, the British government hoped to create a self-sufficient empire that would be able to support itself without the need for British subsidies.

The third factor was the expansion of the British navy, which was the most powerful naval force in the world at the time. This allowed the British to establish a global network of trade routes and to protect their colonies from foreign threats. The navy also played a key role in the acquisition of new territories, such as the Falkland Islands and the Cape of Good Hope.

The fourth factor was the industrial revolution, which transformed Britain into a world power. The invention of the steam engine and the development of new manufacturing techniques allowed Britain to produce goods more cheaply and in greater quantities than any other nation. This gave Britain a significant economic advantage over its rivals and allowed it to expand its empire.

The fifth factor was the policy of 'salutary neglect', which was a deliberate strategy to encourage the growth of the colonies' economies. By allowing the colonies to trade with other nations and to develop their own industries, the British government hoped to create a self-sufficient empire that would be able to support itself without the need for British subsidies.

The sixth factor was the expansion of the British navy, which was the most powerful naval force in the world at the time. This allowed the British to establish a global network of trade routes and to protect their colonies from foreign threats. The navy also played a key role in the acquisition of new territories, such as the Falkland Islands and the Cape of Good Hope.

The seventh factor was the industrial revolution, which transformed Britain into a world power. The invention of the steam engine and the development of new manufacturing techniques allowed Britain to produce goods more cheaply and in greater quantities than any other nation. This gave Britain a significant economic advantage over its rivals and allowed it to expand its empire.

The eighth factor was the policy of 'salutary neglect', which was a deliberate strategy to encourage the growth of the colonies' economies. By allowing the colonies to trade with other nations and to develop their own industries, the British government hoped to create a self-sufficient empire that would be able to support itself without the need for British subsidies.

The ninth factor was the expansion of the British navy, which was the most powerful naval force in the world at the time. This allowed the British to establish a global network of trade routes and to protect their colonies from foreign threats. The navy also played a key role in the acquisition of new territories, such as the Falkland Islands and the Cape of Good Hope.

The tenth factor was the industrial revolution, which transformed Britain into a world power. The invention of the steam engine and the development of new manufacturing techniques allowed Britain to produce goods more cheaply and in greater quantities than any other nation. This gave Britain a significant economic advantage over its rivals and allowed it to expand its empire.

NEWPORT HOUSE.

while under the management of Mr. Silver, whose lady had rare gifts for her position.

The Phenix hotel was built by Orange Whitney in 1870, being assisted in the enterprise by citizens interested in the progress of the village, and was under the management of his son, Calvin H. Whitney, until 1873, when it was sold to James H. Brown, the present proprietor. It is three stories high, with a French roof, has a long ell in the rear, a balcony in front, and has 50 rooms. It is built upon the site formerly occupied by the Sugar River House, which was built by Milan Booth in 1858, and was kept by Mr. Booth, Charles W. Jenks, E. L. Putney, N. B. Hull, and G. L. Cass, and which, in 1867, was destroyed by fire.

CHAPTER XIV.

TRADERS.

NEWPORT, by its favorable location, has always been able to command a very considerable trade. The merchants, as a class, have done a thriving business. Several of them have accumulated fortunes.

Tradition says the first article of merchandise brought into town was a barrel of rum, individuals contributing what they were disposed to; but when it arrived, no one of their number had sufficient knowledge of figures to divide it equitably among the owners, so the matter was deferred until the arrival of Mrs. Christopher Newton, who was able to solve the problem.

The first store in town was kept by a Mr. Hicks, a son-in-law of Jedediah Reynolds, at the place now occupied by the old Boardman house. Josiah Stephens, Esq., kept a stock of goods at his house on the Unity road, at the William Emerson place. Isaac Reddington and David Lyon had a store at the Col. Carr place on the Unity road. William Cheney had a store at the E. Noyes house, at the foot of Claremont hill, when he first commenced trade in town.

Isaac Reddington, Jesse Wilcox, Jr., Solomon Clement, Erastus Baldwin, in 1812, Calvin, Albert, and Jesse Wilcox, in 1833, and Amos Little, have in turn traded at the J. H. Hunton corner, in what was known as the old red store, the first framed building in the village.

The brick building at the corner of Main and Elm streets was built by James Breck, in 1816, and was occupied by him as a store, a portion of the time in connection with Hugh McAllister, and a part with his son, Martin B. Breck.

William Ward had a store at the Harvey corner and at the Tontine.

Calvin and Albert Wilcox, Daniel Wilcox, William and George W. Nourse, George H. Fairbanks, and Philip Royce have traded at the store south of Burke's block. James Cushing, James Breck, J. W. and J. H. Parmalee, Thomas Wallace, Asa Webster, George Herrick, Aaron Matson, and Ransom and Ariel Huntoon have kept in Burke's block.

Little & Story, Alfred Story, and Mudget & Higbee have traded in the store now occupied by C. H. Whitney & Co. Joseph Farnsworth, J. D. Walcott, and Moses P. Durkee traded in a building standing at the east of Wheeler's block in 1824.

Johnson & Averill, George E. Bartlett, William Dunton, Milton S. Jackson, F. A. Rawson, William O. Hopkins, N. J. Smith, Whitney & Sibley, and Charles Brockway have been in trade at Wheeler's block.

The Stowell building was erected by Dea. Joseph Farnsworth and Alvin Hatch in 1826, and occupied by them as a store. J. S. Farnsworth, P. N. Newell, Lovell White, Charles E. Wheeler, Sylvanus Stowell, Barnard & Carter, and C. M. Emerson have in turn occupied the same place as traders.

The old Cheney block, built in 1816, was always occupied for purposes of trade. Wm. Cheney, A. Hatch, S. Partridge, Charles Forbes, W. H. Cheney, Fisher Dudley, Seth, Dexter, and Abiathar Richards, E. C. Converse, J. S. Parmalee, Philo Fuller, Nathan Clark, H. P. Coffin, and J. W. Person have at different times been its occupants.

The traders at the Nettleton block have been Jeremiah Kelsey, 2d, in 1810, Aaron Nettleton, Jr., T. W. Gilmore, Joseph Farnsworth, Bela Nettleton, F. W. Lewis, Wm. Young, Benj. Wadleigh, Quimby & Simmons, Rawson & Livermore, Bascom & Livermore, Stowell & Wiggin, A. D. Howard, and A. P. Welcome.

Wm. White had a store just south of the village bridge, and John Cutting one at the Goldthwait place, in the north part of the town.

Harrison Rice traded at Northville in 1843, Wm. B. Duggan in 1850, and E. H. Wakefield in 1878.

In the early times there were two stores north of Northville, —one on the old Joel McGregor place, and the other on the Eben Rowell farm. Dea. Elias Metcalf, Dr. James Corbin, Moses P. Durkee, and Joel McGregor were among the owners, and Jonah Griswold, the famous old school-teacher, was the most noted clerk.

Samuel H. Edes & Son have been in trade for several years at the Eagle block. Geo. W. Britton, Edwin A. Kenion, and Jonathan Barnard have also been engaged extensively in trade.

Nathan White and Nathan White & Son have for many years been commission dealers in wool, furs, pork, butter, and poultry for the Boston market.

E. H. Dunbar commenced the poultry business for the Boston markets in 1872, and Henry A. Wilcox in 1873.

DRUGS. Drugs and medicines were kept for a long time by the merchants at their stores, mainly by Wilcox and Cheney, until 1848, when Nathaniel Adams opened the first drug store in town in Little's block. His successors have been Samuel Day, Jr.; W. W. Leavitt, E. C. Converse, Sam Nims, Ira P. George, D. W. Howe, Hurd & Ayer, Carleton Hurd, and John C. Kelley.

BOOKS. William Cheney in 1815, Cyrus Barton in 1824, Simon Brown in 1833, David Harris, Mudget & Higbee, E. C. Converse in 1859, John C. Kelley, and Carleton Hurd have been dealers in books. Calvin Messenger, in 1825, kept a depository for tracts and Sabbath-school books, in the south part of the village.

Lovell White & Co., Abiathar Richards, M. W. Burke, Loren H. Chase, A. V. Hitchcock, John O. Hobbs, and Young & Hutchinson have dealt largely in ready-made clothing and gentlemen's furnishing goods.

James Wheeler, William P. Wheeler, David Hale, Edmund Wheeler, G. & E. A. Pollard, and Charles H. Watts have kept large stocks of saddles, harnesses, trunks, and horse-furnishing goods.

John Russ, Joseph T. Chase, Sawyer Belknap, John B. Stowell, Dean S. Clement, B. C. Logue, Hunton & Dudley, Boardman & Patch, Patch & Dudley, Daniel F. Patch, Ethan S. Chase, and E. S. Chase & Son have traded extensively in boots and shoes, keeping large stocks.

STOVES AND HARDWARE have been largely dealt in by Robinson & Orvis, Robinson & Wilcox, Calvin Wilcox & Son, Sibley & Brown, Hatch & Stowell, and S. G. Stowell & Son.

WATCHES AND JEWELRY. Large stocks have been kept by Amos O. Woodbury, A. O. Woodbury & Son, A. O. Kidder, and E. P. Fisher.

MILK. Abner P. Welcome first commenced the milk trade, since which time Francis H. Goldthwait, Putnam George, E. H. Dunbar, S. A. Tenney, Henry Stearns, and Arthur H. Wilmarth have supplied the market.

CHAPTER XV.

TRAVEL.

DURING the first fifty years after the settlement of the town, travelling was done almost wholly on foot, on horseback, and on sleds and carts drawn by ox-teams. So late as 1810, the Rev. Baron Stow, D. D., of Boston, says,—“At the large church at Northville, well filled with hearers, there were no carriages present.” The usual way was on horseback: the man took the saddle, the wife sat upon a pillion behind, a child in the lap of each, while the other members of the family followed on foot. Ox-teams, which carried the whole family and the less fortunate neighbors, were more generally used at first.

ROADS. The first road opened in town was a cart-road from Charlestown. It extended from North Charlestown, through Unity, over Pike hill, to the foot of Call hill on the Unity road. It was laid out in pursuance of a vote of the proprietors, passed on the second Tuesday of March, 1766. The road at the west end of the first division of lots,—the one extending north from the Griffin place,—was voted to be built at the same meeting. It was surveyed and laid out, eight rods wide, in July, 1770. The road extending from the Fairbanks place to the Giles (now Granite) mills was built in 1770. The Unity road was laid out in 1776. The village road, extending from Croydon to the Goshen line, was built in 1779. The old road to Claremont, north of the river, was built in 1793. The new road following the river was built in 1834. The road from the D. Wilmarth corner to Cornish was built in 1804. The road from Northville, north, was probably a county road, and built about 1770, the time of the first settlements in that part of the town.

TURNPIKES. A turnpike fever prevailed, and was at its height here from 1804 to 1814. The Croydon turnpike, extending from Lebanon to Washington, passing through the town by way of Croydon Flat, and the village, to Goshen Mill village, was chartered June 25, 1804, and built in 1806. It was very useful in its day, and over it passed nearly all the travel and freight along the line to and from Boston. The flattering prospects of large dividends to the stockholders, which induced them to commence the undertaking, were never realized. It was given up, and a public road laid out over it by the town in 1838.

At the annual meeting in 1809, the proposition to pay money in aid of the Newport Turnpike Corporation, extending from the Croydon turnpike in Newport to Keene, came up for consideration, and the town voted not to extend the aid.

March 13, 1810, the town voted to give the Cornish Turnpike Corporation, which was incorporated Dec. 9, 1808, $1,500, in three annual instalments. In April, following, it was voted to rescind the above vote; and in March, 1811, the town voted to pass over an article appropriating money in aid of the corporation. At the end of a vexatious lawsuit, the town paid the $1,500. This road extended from the Croydon turnpike, at A. P. Welcome's, through Northville, to Cornish bridge, by way of Governor's pond at the north-west corner of the town.

March 12, 1812, the town voted to give the Sunapee Turnpike Corporation $1,200, in three annual instalments. On this proposition the vote stood,—yea, 104; nay, 81. This road extended from the village to Bradford through South Sunapee.

BRIDGES. At the annual meeting, March 8, 1774, the town "voted to build a bridge across the east branch of Sugar river, near the east end of the first division of lots," which was near the site of the present village bridge on Main street. Fifteen pounds was raised to defray the expense, to be paid in labor or grain at market price. Aaron Buel, Phineas Wilcox, and Ezra Parmelee were chosen building committee.

"March 13, 1775, voted to build a bridge over the south branch, between lots No. 16 and No. 17, in the first division." This was near the present bridge on Elm street. Twenty-five pounds was raised for the purpose. Amos Hall, Ebenezer Merritt, and Aaron Buel were chosen building committee. This bridge was not built until 1776.

The first covered bridge was erected at Kelleyville in 1839. Previous to this, bridges across the river were made with string-pieces, supported in part by trestle work standing in the stream; and more or less of them were swept away by nearly every spring freshet, thus subjecting the town to inconvenience and expense.

CANALS. The "Connecticut and Merrimack River Canal," which was to extend from the Connecticut up Sugar river, through this town, Sunapee, New London, Wilmot, and Andover, was surveyed in 1828. The project had many friends, and was warmly advocated by the press, and in speeches at public meetings, but was finally abandoned.

RAILROADS. The N. H. Central Railroad, connecting Manchester and Windsor, Vt., and the Concord & Claremont Railroad, were incorporated at the June session of 1848. The former was built as far as Henniker, and the latter as far as Bradford, when in January, 1853, the two incorporations were united by the legislature, and took the name of the Merrimack & Connecticut River Railroad. In the fall of that year a large and enthusiastic meeting was held in town to promote the interests of the new corporation. A committee, consisting of N. Mudget, D. Richards, and M. Glidden, was appointed to solicit the taking of bonds. Fifty thousand dollars was the amount assigned to Newport; but Claremont refusing to take its $100,000, the amount thought to be its share, the matter was abandoned. The Sugar River Railroad was incorporated in 1866. The road is now known as the Concord & Claremont Railroad.

At a meeting held May 9, 1866, the town voted, 192 to 70, to give any responsible party that would construct a railroad from Bradford to Newport, $45,000, which was five per cent. on the total valuation of the town. Subsequently $20,000 more was raised by individuals for the same end, making in all $65,000. The contracts for building the road were made in 1870. Mr. A. M. Shaw, of Lebanon, was appointed construction agent, and Mr. R. S. Howe, of the same town, engineer. Mr. Howe has since removed to this town. The first ground broken in the grading of the road in town was near the passenger depot, at sunrise, on the morning of May 31, 1870. A large crowd was present, and the general joy of our citizens was manifested by the cheering of the multitude, the ringing of the bells, and the firing of cannon. Seth Richards, Esq., struck the first pick, and Dr. Mason Hatch wheeled the first barrow of dirt,—two of our oldest and most respected citizens. The track was laid to the depot, and the first train of cars passed Main street on the evening of Nov. 21, 1871, cheered by a jubilant throng of spectators. The first regular train from Bradford to Claremont through town was on the morning of Sept. 16, 1872, which event was duly celebrated at Claremont.

ROAD STEAMER. The "Fairy Queen," a road steamer manufactured by Mr. E. M. Clough, of Sunapee, made its first appearance in our village Sept. 11, 1871, by trips around the public park and up and down Main street.

STAGES. The first line of stages in Newport ran between Windsor, Vt., and Boston, passing through this town by way of Washington, making a trip each way once a week. It was established in 1818. Its appearance was hailed as an advance step in the progress of the town, and excited almost as much interest as did the first railroad cars at a later period. People came from distant parts of the town to witness the event. Shortly after, another line was added by Joseph Dewey, of Hanover, which ran from his place over the Croydon turnpike, and formed a junction with the other line at our village. Not being sufficiently patronized, it was soon given up, but was started again, in 1828, by Capt. John Russ. This renewal the Windsor line chose to regard as an infringement upon their right to carry all the passengers from Hanover. A sharp competition at once arose, and went to such lengths that Russ carried his passengers for a while for nothing, and the Windsor line on the same terms, and, in addition, paid their grog bills at the taverns. About the same time with the other two, another line was started to Boston by way of Bradford and Henniker, and in 1829 still another from Concord to Albany, N. Y. Some year or two later the Woodstock and Lowell line commenced its trips, running at a different hour of the day from either of the others. The daily lines of stages to Acworth, Sunapee, and Croydon were started at the opening of the railroad in 1871. During the last half century, by far the largest amount of staging has been done over the route now occupied by the Concord & Claremont Railroad.

Our account of staging would be incomplete should we fail to make some reference to that jolly set of fellows known as drivers, who, with reins in hand, bravely endured the muds of spring, the heats of summer, and the chilling blasts of winter, cracking their whips and their jokes.

Among the principal drivers on the Lebanon route were Warren Ryder, Stephen Williams, and A. P. Welcome; on the Washington route, Benjamin Simpson, Warren Ryder, and Jerry Hubbard; on the Claremont route, Samuel Vose, Ward B. Royce, a Mr. Judevine, Oscar J. Brown, H. A. Perry, and Prentice Welcome; and on the Bradford route, Samuel Vose, Mr. Robbins, T. J. Eastman, Chester Averill, H. A. Averill, and H. A. Perry. The stageman who will be the longest remembered is probably Mr. Chester Averill, who for a quarter of a century was noted for his careful driving and his attention to the wants of his patrons, and whose gentlemanly bearing and keen wit never failed to transform his bitterest rivals into warm friends.

The palmiest days of staging were after the completion of the Concord Railroad, and before the inauguration of the Sullivan road, when we had six stages, loaded to their utmost capacity, passing through town every day. The team of Mr. Oscar J. Brown, driven at this time, composed of six beautiful white horses, fat and sleek, was a source of much pride and satisfaction, especially to the young ladies and gentlemen, to whom he granted occasionally a sort of triumphal excursion about town.

LIVERY STABLES. John Russ, Seth Richards, William Carter, Milton Glidden, Charles W. Jenks, A. P. Welcome, A. S. Dill, J. Hosley, M. B. Bartlett, H. A. Averill, J. W. Ladd, George F. Watts, M. S. Jackson, Putnam George, Frank Nichols, S. A. French, and O. P. Brown have each in turn been keepers of livery.

TEAMS. The early settlers, during the first years in their hard struggles with the wilderness, lived almost wholly within themselves, raising their own provisions, and manufacturing their garments from wool and flax of their own production; but when more of the land had come under cultivation, the skill and industry of the people produced more than was sufficient to supply the demands for home consumption, and the surplus sought other markets. This trade was carried on by what was afterwards known as "pod teams";—that is, a farmer, upon the fall of the first snows of winter, would take a span of horses, or a yoke of oxen and sled, on which were loaded his beef, pork, butter, and cheese, a bag of oats for his team, and a bucket of provisions for himself, and make a trip to Boston or Salem, where he would exchange them for salt, tea, coffee, or whatever else the family might desire. But with the increase of trade, there began to grow up a division of labor, and larger teams were put upon the road, and teaming became a business. In 1833 there were six large teams of heavy horses making regular trips between this place and Boston. Leonard Richards, David Carr, and Aaron Clark had each a six-horse team, and Norman McGregor three eight-horse teams. During this period our roads and hotels were constantly thronged, from sunrise to sunset, by large teams jostling each other on their way to and from Vermont to Boston. This continued until the completion of the railroads to Claremont and Bradford, when travel and freight were diverted to other channels; after which, two six-horse teams, the one driven by William Bachelder, and the other by W. J. Sanderson, were able to meet the wants of the community until the completion of the railroad through the town. The first team in town was owned and run for several years by Alvin Hatch (afterwards a merchant), who sold out to Leonard Richards. William Carr, T. B. Richards, and D. D. Muzzey were also teamsters.

JOB TEAMS. Jesse T. Cobb started the first job team in 1870. Since then, George F. Whitney and David J. Remington have run them.

CHAPTER XVI.

MANUFACTORIES.

THE numerous streams, and more especially the main river, through which flow the waters of Sunapee lake, furnish the town with an abundance of water-power, and rare opportunities for manufactures, which have been well improved. Prior to 1830 nearly every farm-house was a manufactory, with wheels, looms, and other appliances, and these were aided by the carding-machine and the cloth-dressers. Since then it has assumed its present form, and has been steadily increasing until it has become, with the exception of agriculture, by far the most important branch of business in town, and has contributed most materially to promote the growth and prosperity of the village. The following is a brief sketch of each of the mills. The golden harvest of manufacturers was during the civil war, when their products were in great demand for the soldiers, and commanded the highest prices.

NEWPORT MILLS. Col. James D. Walcott erected a building in 1813, on the site now occupied by the establishment of W. L. Dow & Co., for the manufacture of cotton yarn. After running it for several years, he sold out to Hon. Franklin Simonds, who continued the business until 1831, when the factory was burned. It was rebuilt, and occupied as an oil-mill until 1844, when Ingram & Parks put in machinery for making broadcloths and cassimeres. It was afterwards known as the Eagle Mills, and was occupied by Solomon Dean for the manufacture of flannels. He sold to Abiathar Richards, on whose hands, in Nov., 1872, it was burned.

The whole amount of cloth produced annually at this and the Eagle Mills, the only ones in operation July 1, 1846, was, as reported by a committee at the celebration that year, 43,525 yards, worth $43,000, thus showing the extent of manufacturing business in town at that time.

In 1870 Mr. Dean employed in this mill, according to the U. S. census, fifteen hands, wages, $6,000; used 75,000 pounds of wool and cotton; and made 140,000 yards flannel. He used 300 cords of wood, and $1,500 worth of dyestuff.

THE EAGLE MILLS were built by Farnsworth, Durkee & Co., in 1822, for an oil-mill: subsequently Breck & Co. fitted it up for the manufacture of cotton yarn. In 1835 several individuals formed a company, and by act of incorporation were known as the Newport Mechanics Manufacturing Company, for the manufacture of satinets, which company, after running some two years, failed. Parks & Twitchell took the mill in 1838, and commenced making cassimere. Two years after, Mr. Twitchell bought the interest of Mr. Parks, and continued the business until 1844, when he enlarged the building, and put in machinery for making broadcloths, satinets, cassimeres, tweeds, flannels, and fancy cloths. Mr. Twitchell did a very successful business for more than a dozen years, but became embarrassed, and in 1854 sold out to the Eagle Mills Company. After running it several years, they sold to William Nourse, who had a successful business during the war. He sold to S. H. Edes and Amos O. Woodbury. After one year Mr. Edes became the sole owner of the mills, and has since continued the business. In 1870, by the U. S. census, Mr. Edes employed seventeen hands, wages, $6,500; used 76,000 pounds of wool and cotton; produced 150,000 yards of blue mixed flannels; and used 350 cords of wood, and $3,000 worth of dyestuff.

SUNAPEE MILLS. Smith & Rockwell commenced the manufacture of satinets in 1832, at a factory standing at the falls at the bridge near the residence of A. C. Fletcher, above the Sugar River Mills, which was built originally for a clothiers' shop. The building was burned in 1835, and another was soon after erected in its place. This was occupied by Philo Fuller, for the manufacture of worsted yarn, until 1839. It was destroyed by fire the following year.

THE DIAMOND MILL, standing at the corner of Main and River streets, was built in 1836 for a machine-shop, but has been occupied for several years as a flannel mill. The machinery was first put in by Jordan & Marsh, of Boston, and was operated by D. J. Goodrich. It has since been run by Dexter Richards, George S. Coffin, and George C. Richardson. In 1876, the machinery was removed to the Granite Mills. In 1870, Geo. S. Coffin employed nineteen hands, used 80,000 pounds of wool and cotton, and made 190,000 yards flannel. Amount of wages paid, $12,000.

THE SUGAR RIVER MILLS were built in 1847 by Perley S. Coffin and John Puffer. Mr. Puffer sold his interest to David G. Goodrich, and he in turn soon after sold to Seth and Dexter Richards. Mr. Seth Richards having retired from the company, his son, Dexter Richards, and Mr. Coffin, continued the business until 1867, when Mr. Coffin retired. During the war their goods were in great demand. The establishment was greatly enlarged and improved, and they had a most prosperous business. In 1870, by the U. S. census, Mr. Richards employed sixty-two hands, wages, $18,000; used 250,000 pounds of wool and cotton; made 800,000 yards flannel; used 500 cords of wood, and $7,000 worth of dyestuff. In 1872, Seth M. Richards was admitted as a partner with his father. The following is a brief summary of this mill in 1878:

Dexter Richards & Son, proprietors. Capital, $150,000. Dexter Richards, president; S. M. Richards, superintendent; A. B. Chase, clerk. Employs eighty-five operatives. Run eight sets cards, Francis Foote, overseer; forty-four narrow looms, B. F. Peasley, overseer; fifteen spinning-machines, H. M. Ingram, overseer; coloring and finishing, Patrick Herrick, overseer. Manufacture 900,000 yards gray twilled flannels annually; use 280,000 pounds cotton and wool. Selling agents, Lewis Brothers & Co., Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. Trade mark, D. R. P. In this mill eleven hours constitute a day's work.

THE GRANITE STATE MILLS were built in 1867 by Perley S. Coffin and William Nourse, and have always been occupied as a woollen manufactory. They employed, in 1870, as by U. S. census, forty hands, wages, $18,000; used 266,000 pounds of wool and cotton; and produced $600,000 yards of blue-mixed twilled flannels annually. They used 700 cords of wood and $20,000 worth of dyestuff. In 1876, this mill was enlarged to more than twice its former capacity. It now (1878) employs 100 operatives, uses 45,000 pounds raw stuff per month, has nine sets of cards and forty-eight looms, and manufactures 30,000 yards seventy-two inch skirting and 15,000 yards flannels per month.

CHAPTER XVII.

OTHER MANUFACTURES, AND ARTISANS.

THE following is a list of the other principal manufactures, and the artisans who have lived and practised their various trades in town, so far as ascertained, given as nearly as may be in the order of time in which they operated.

BAKERS. Mr. C. Boyle had a bakery for a short time at the building now occupied by the Fairbanks & Royce store, commencing in 1832. Muzzey & Carr, the present operators, commenced here in 1877. Previously the public wants in this direction had been supplied by the bakers at Keene, Claremont, Hanover, and St. Johnsbury, Vt.

BARBERS. Elkanah C. Sweet established the first barber-shop in town, in the autumn of 1858. D. W. Watkins, a Mr. Bundy, and William Jones have since had shops here for a brief time. Rufus S. and G. Freeman Dudley, the present operators, commencing in 1860, have, by their skill, attention to business, and financial tact, placed it among the prosperous industries of the town.

BEDSTEADS. Bedsteads were made to quite an extent by Willard Harris and William Lowell, in their cabinet shops; but the more extensive manufacture, for foreign markets, was introduced by Nutting & Buxton, who had ample machinery fitted up for this special business. They have been succeeded by Leander Long, J. H. Hubbard, W. W. Hubbell, and Rufus P. Claggett.

BLACKSMITHS. Seth Chase had the first shop in town, at the E. Noyes place at the foot of Claremont hill. Another shop, among the earliest, stood on Pine street, half way to the corner, north. The business has since been carried on in various parts of the town: Samuel Church, Samuel Church, Jr., and Jonathan Church, near the place where now stands Wheeler's block; Enoch Woods, James D. Gordon, David B. Chapin, D. D. Chapin, at the M. Harvey corner; Sargent Heath, a Mr. Bailey, Andrew Walker, C. M. Brown, and C. A. Maxfield, on River street; Ruel Keith, Ruel H. Keith, Charles Lathrop, Elias Lathrop, Lucius Lathrop, Isaac Woodbury, Jacob Woodbury, John B. Cooper, Charles Kelsey, and E. Wilkins, at the Woodbury shop on Sunapee street; M. Campbell, a Mr. Bugbee, and Joel McGregor, at old Baptist hill, near the present residence of Hillard Rowell; David Fletcher, Alanson Fletcher, William Atwood, and Jonathan Emerson, Jr., at Northville; Flanders & Dame and Benjamin Noyes, at the Granite Mills; John Parmelee, at Southville; Jacob Dwinell, at Kelleyville; Jonathan Wakefield, at the Dea. Kibby place; David B. Chapin, Chapin & Cooper, Chapin & Kelsey, and Lear & Maxfield, at the D. B. Chapin shop on Elm street. Charles and Lucius Lathrop have a shop near their residence, opposite the trotting-park, on the road to Sunapee.

BOBBINS. Anson Warren had a bobbin-shop at Northville for a number of years. Wilcox & Keith had a shop at Northville and at Diamond mill.

BOOK-BINDERS. Edmund Wellington was engaged in book-binding and paper-ruling for a number of years.

BRICK-MAKERS. David Brown made the first bricks in town, in 1776. Jeremiah Kelsey, Roswell Kelsey, Henry Peck, Benjamin Emerson, Clark Emerson, Oliver Emerson, and Cyrus Emerson made brick at the N. Mudget yard on Sunapee street; C. Peck, O. Emerson, Caleb Young, and Joseph Wilcox, at the Wilcox yard on Spring street; J. M. Wilmarth and James Stone & Son, at the B. W. Jenks place at the corner of Oak and Pine streets; Albert Hurd, at his home on the Goshen road. A Mr. Bachelder made brick in the marsh above the school-house in District No. 14, in 1811 and 1812.

BUILDERS. W. L. Dow & Co., since the erection of their large factory in 1873, have been extensive contractors and builders. They employ some forty hands, and fill contracts amounting on an average to some $75,000 a year. They have operated in various states. Church-building, of which they have done a large amount of tasteful work, has been their specialty. They built the new court-house in this town, and are now filling a contract for the wood work of the new New Hampshire state prison. Their operations have been an important element in the prosperity of the village.

BUTCHERS. Seth Richards, Allen Towne, Edward Ingham, Samuel F. Chellis, Harvey Richards, Freeman Chellis, A. F. Nettleton, Edward P. Woods, Rufus P. Claggett, Putnam George, Benjamin Coles, B. C. Whipple, L. F. Dodge, D. G. Chadwick, F. A. Rawson, George F. Livermore, George F. Watts, Charles H. Silsby, Henry M. Kimball, Wiggin & Britton, and John B. Haven have operated here as butchers.

CABINET-MAKING. Asa Corbin, a brother of Dr. James Corbin, who had a shop near the brick-yard on the B. W. Jenks place, was the first cabinet-maker in town. Maj. Willard Harris was one of the earliest workers, commencing in 1808 at the Enoch Noyes place. From 1820 to 1837 cabinet-making was one of the most extensive and successful branches of business in town. Joined with this, to a greater or less extent in summer, were carriage-, sign-, and house-painting. There were then two large rival shops,—the one occupied by William Lowell, in which was employed a large number of hands, stood upon the site now occupied by the Rounsevel tannery; the other, run by Maj. Willard Harris, employed some fifteen hands, and operated in the Samuel E. George building. His machinery was propelled by water, by means of a long belt which extended from an ell down to the pond. An underground sluice-way, now hid, carried away the waste water, and afforded an eight-foot fall. The shops were both run by finished mechanics, and turned out a large amount of nice work. Among the workmen were Leander Long, Moses Hall, Sumner Millen, Francis Gay, Simon Dodge, Samuel Dame, Harvey Silver, Horace Ellis, William Dunklee, David Batchelder, Amos Dwinell, Samuel E. George, Elias J. Severance, and Washington Cressy. Dame & Howe had a chair factory at the Diamond mill. James L. Riley, R. P. Claggett, Putnam George, S. N. Stevens, William W. Hubbell, James H. Hubbard, and C. F. Osgood & Co. have been dealers in cabinet work.

CARD-BOARD. Royal Booth had a card-board shop at the brook near Randall's mill. It was shortly burned, and never rebuilt.

CARPENTERS AND JOINERS. Ebenezer Merrit, one of the first eight men who came to town in 1766, was by trade a carpenter. Daniel Wilmarth, Thomas Tenney, Jonathan Haven, Loa Walker, John Gilmore, J. M. Wilmarth, Benjamin M. Gilmore, Wm. Darling, Hial Dow, Wallace L. Dow, Wilber F. Dow, S. S. Ingalls, S. P. Whitney, D. G. Reed, E. D. Baker, E. D. Taylor, John Turner, S. T. Trumbull, William H. Badger, Harlan P. Hunter, Daniel W. Dudley, Elmer Dodge, Arthur W. Clark, Israel Young, Frank Latimer, Charles Currier, Frank H. Davis, Sanford H. Bascom, Benj. F. Haven, Charles Wilkins, Charles H. Matthews, Edwin H. Wakefield, Benj. R. Allen, S. S. Cram, Christopher George, Edward Stevens, Edwin Cutts, Charles Hutchinson, Edwin H. Tenney, Thomas Heald, James Perkins, Henry Tenney, Luther P. Tenney, Martin L. Whittier, Oliver Call, Moody E. Blood, have been engaged in the business.

CARRIAGE-MAKERS. The first one-horse wagon was brought to town in 1811, by Capt. Matthew Buel. The first chaise made in town was for Col. Wm. Cheney, Mr. Daniel Wilmarth making the wheels and Willard Harris the remainder of the wood-work. Mr. Wilmarth made the wheels for the carts and wagons for many years. Zacheus Bachelder, John Bachelder, Orlando Mack, William Thompson & Co., C. D. Dunbar, J. W. Clement, Wm. H. Dunbar, H. H. Silsby, S. T. Silsby, James S. Heath, Byron C. Heath, Hunter Brothers, Bela C. Pike, Edward Wilkins, and James K. Pierce have been engaged in the business. Heath, Lathrop & Halpine once did an extensive business, making many very elegant carriages for this and other markets, at the shop below the village saw-mill, on River street.

CARRIAGE PAINTERS. Maj. David Harris, Terrey Halpine, T. L. Heath, L. D. Baker, Sidney A. Williams, Stocker Bros., and John Sargent are among the principal workmen.

CLOTH-DRESSING. During the first half-century, the people were all almost wholly clad in homespun, women as well as men, and wool-carding and cloth-dressing was a very important branch of business. The first cloth-dresser in town was Reuben Bascom, who commenced business in 1778. He lived at the Bascom place on the Unity road, and had his shop at the upper falls on the Goshen Branch at Southville. His son, Reuben, Jr., learned the trade of him, and succeeded him in business at the same place. Nathan Hurd built a mill about 1800, at the falls near the residence of A. T. Fletcher, on the Sunapee road, where he carried on an extensive business for more than twenty years. He sold to Elisha Kempton in 1822. It was purchased by Philo Fuller, who introduced machinery for the manufacture of satinets. It was afterwards owned by Oliver Comstock and Smith & Rockwell. The present Scribner's mill was built by Osha Ingram and Simon C. Fields, in 1822, for a carding and cloth-dressing mill, where they carried on business for many years. It has since been owned by John Puffer, David J. Goodrich, and John Scribner.

COMB-MAKER. Hiram Smith had a shop for the manufacture of combs at the Diamond mill.

COOPERS. Daniel Chapin was the first cooper in town. He commenced in 1781, on the place since occupied by his son Frederick, in the north-west part of the town, and carried it on in connection with his farming. Previous to 1830, work of this kind was done by hand, and Jonathan Haven and Cyrus B. McGregor were prominent among the workers. Moses P. Durkee and Cyrus B. McGregor built a dam and shop at the upper bridge over the brook at Northville in 1831, where they made barrels and tubs for the Boston market. In 1832 they sent away some 2,000 barrels. Since Mr. Durkee's death, the work in the shop has been carried on by Mr. McGregor, who invented the patent for shaving and jointing staves. King & Chellis had a shop at the Diamond mill, at the village, where they made mackerel kits. H. & W. L. Dow had a pail and tub factory on the site now occupied by the Allen mill, at Northville, where they did quite an extensive business. In 1870 they made 18,000 tubs and pails. They have since operated at their factory in the village.

DESIGNERS AND DRAUGHTSMEN. Henry E. Baldwin, in 1850, and George S. Barton, in 1856, were engaged in business as draughtsmen, the former also an engraver on wood.

DOORS, SASH, AND BLINDS. Alpheus Goodwin built the upper dam and shop above the B. F. Haven mill, on Morse brook at Northville, for a sash and blind shop, and carried on business there several years. Gilmore & Clark and Lorenzo Whittemore had shops at the carriage factory on River street. The establishment of W. L. Dow & Co. was built in the autumn of 1873, since which time they have done a large amount of business in that line.

DRESS-MAKING. The following are a few among the many ladies who have had a reputation for extra taste and skill at dress-making: Mrs. P. S. Adams, Mrs. E. C. Clement, Mrs. George E. Little, the Misses Barrett, and Mrs. George H. Comstock.

GUNSMITH. Vinal W. Goodwin for several years kept a stock of arms and ammunition for sale, and was engaged in the repair of arms. He was succeeded by C. T. Palmer.

HAME-MAKERS. Rev. Joseph Baker, a Methodist clergyman at Northville, had a shop at the J. Jones place, and was the first man to establish the business in town. He was followed in the same place by Schuyler Smith. Benj. F. Haven carried on quite an extensive business for a number of years at his mill at Northville.

HANDLES. The fork- and hoe-handle business has been carried on by Jonathan M. Wilmarth, L. F. Dodge, and Leander Long, at the J. M. Wilmarth place on Oak street, and by Geo. E. Wilmarth and E. M. Alexander at the shop near the village saw-mill on River street. In 1874, Mr. Dodge made 100,000 handles.

HATTERS. James Church, one of the earliest settlers, made hats at his house, which stood on the site of the E. A. Jenks residence. Nathaniel Fisher had a shop at the E. Noyes house. Nathan Moulton also made hats. James White made hats at the house of Maj. Wilcox, on the Unity road, as early as 1784. Benjamin Mirick was the first man to operate at the trade within the limits of the present village. Amos Little, first, when a young man, in connection with Thomas Rundlett, and afterwards alone, had a successful business through life, supplying a large region of country around him. James and Moody Bricket, brothers-in-law of Mr. Little, Bela N. Chamberlin, and Charles H. and George E. Little, sons of Amos, have also been engaged in the business.

JEWELERS. As elegant and costly jewelry did not correspond with the homespun attire of our mothers, and was not needed to add to the charms of the daughters, it was little used by them. Dr. Arnold Ellis, who was a sort of universal genius, took care of their clocks and watches, and supplied the wants of the community in this respect. He was succeeded by John Dunklee, who had a shop at the Harvey corner. Jacob Beckwith, at the Nettleton store, was the first man in town who made eight-day clocks. Benjamin Tuell and Benjamin B. Cushing opened shops here in 1830. The former soon left town, while the latter remained here some eight years. In 1841 Amos Woodbury came to town, and opened a shop. When he left, Hiram Smith, S. G. Sweatt, and Amos O. Woodbury, son of Amos, came to take his place. Since then, Lyman Carr, Orison N. Hull, A. O. Kidder, a Mr. Hallett, C. W. Graham, George H. Woodbury, and E. P. Fisher have been engaged in the business. Mr. A. O. Woodbury has been the most prominent worker, and has carried on the business for more than thirty years. The present attractive establishments are those of A. O. Woodbury & Son and E. P. Fisher.

KNITTING. James M. Kenerson, in 1873, operated twenty-five knitting-machines, and knit 80,000 pairs of stockings. Charles H. Kelsey put out 66,000 pairs of stockings for heel-ing and toeing in 1873, and J. Barnard 50,000. John Scribner has been engaged in the manufacture of stockings for a number of years at his mill on Canal street, producing at the rate of 75,000 pairs annually.

MARBLE-WORKERS. W. E. Moore, a fine mechanic, opened the first marble shop in town in 1854. He has been succeeded in business by Charles H. Puffer and Mitchell W. Howe. Mr. Puffer still continues in the business.

GRANITE-WORKERS. Stephen H. Hurd, Walling & Son, Jonathan Blake, Daniel Severance, Puffer & McQuestion, and David Leach have been the prominent workers.

MASONS. Jonathan Wakefield was the chief operator for many years. John Silver did most of the mason work on the early brick buildings. The South church, court-house, and old Newport House were erected by him. Among the other workmen are John Silver, Jr., Samuel Noyes, James and Joseph Karr, Geo. H. Tasker, and J. W. Sargent. Tradition says

Mr. Wakefield was a moderate worker, and that the massive chimneys of his day contained many thousand bricks. Once, when rebuked for his slow progress, he replied that he always made it a rule, when the job was half done, to take a note with interest, and he had found it a great help.

MACHINE SHOP. The building now known as the Diamond Mills was erected by Stephen W. Little, in 1836, for a machine shop, he being aided in his enterprise by Alvin Hatch; but the revulsions in the business which occurred at that time brought things to a stand-still, and labor in the shop was suspended before the machinery was all fairly in. Subsequently the business was carried on for a while by Moses Hoyt, in the same building. Stephen S. Kimball, the present operator, commenced here in 1875.

MILLINERY. The first milliner in town was Mary Nevers, wife of Matthew Buell, 2d, who is recorded as having especial skill in the arrangement of the head-gear of the belles of her time. For many years milliners kept no goods, but simply made into bonnets and hats such materials as their customers brought them, which were usually obtained at the stores. A Miss Pierce advertises, in 1825,—“Bonnets, caps, turbans, gowns, spencers, pelisses, walking and riding dresses, London and Boston fashions.” The following is a list of the principal milliners: Hannah Hale, Sophia J. Person, Lydia Forsaith, Susan Wilcox, C. Wood, E. L. Webster, R. T. Angell, Parmelia Hurd, Elizabeth Jenks, Thankful M. Newell, Caroline L. Nutting, Nancy M. Thissell, Fanny Woodard, Dean S. Clement, Jennie Hurd, Mrs. I. W. Parker, A. J. Prescott, Mrs. A. D. Howard, Bell A. Dunlap & Co., S. H. Edes, and Abby Foote. The frequent changes of fashion, and the demand for high-cost goods, which originated during the inflations of the civil war, have tended greatly to enhance the importance of this branch of trade.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. David Lyons, the “inn-keeper,” made an organ which was kept at his house at the Claggett place for many years, which was used to entertain his patrons. Dr. John B. McGregor made a double-bass viol, in 1833, to be used at the South church. Luther King carried on quite a business in the manufacture of bass-viol.

PAINTERS. William Lowell, Samuel E. George, William A. Humphrey, W. S. George, Clifton C. George, Daniel Blaisdell, and E. J. Graves are among those who have been engaged in house-painting.

PEGS. S. G. Bret had a factory at Northville quite a number of years, where he manufactured some 15,000 bushels of shoe-pegs annually, which he sold at $1.50 per bushel, amounting to $22,500.

PHOTOGRAPHERS. Before the invention of the Daguerrean art, most likenesses were preserved by portrait-painters, who operated on canvas with oil-colors. B. F. Mason, E. Woolson, and a Mrs. Shute executed most of this kind of work here,—that of the latter having the most admirers. Christopher Rowell, V. W. Goodwin, O. P. Baston, G. W. Goodrich, J. Parker, and H. J. Brown have each been engaged here in the photograph business.

PLOWS. William Haven made the wood-work for most of the plows previous to the introduction of the cast-iron mould-board and point. The wooden mould-board was covered with pieces of old iron. The plows of the early days were clumsy affairs, when compared with those of modern times.

POTASH. The pot- and pearl-ash manufacture was at one time quite a business in town. Potash was made at the foot of Claremont hill, at the Claggett place on the Unity road, on the hill beyond the Griffin place, known once as Potash hill, at the foot of the hill near the Sunapee line, on the hill road, and at the A. S. Kibby place. Col. William Cheney made pot- and pearl-ash at a building in rear of his store.

RAKES. The manufacture of hand-rakes by water-power has long been an important branch of business in town. It was first introduced here by Norman McGregor in 1833, who had a shop on Kimball brook, just west of the residence of Mr. A. Wylie. The lathe for turning the handles was invented by James Haven, of this town. The business has been carried on at Northville since, by James and B. F. Haven, Daniel C. Story, John Johnson, N. O. Page, David Fletcher, Jr., and H. P. & J. M. Wakefield. Henry Chapin had a shop on Perry brook, in the west part of the town, and afterwards, in connection with A. W. Tenney, had a shop at Southville, on the Goshen Branch, where they made some 2,500 rakes annually. The shop of J. M. Wilmarth, below the village, built in 1839, has always done a thriving business. Since his day it has been owned by Peyton R. Gardner and L. F. Dodge. Previous to the use of water-power, rakes were made by hand. James Whipple, at Southville, was the principal manufacturer for several years. N. O. Page & Son, in 1870, made at Northville 6,000 rakes. E. M. Alexander has a shop near the village saw-mill.

SADDLERS. Saddle-, harness-, and trunk-making, and horse-findings, has, during nearly the whole history of the town, been one of the important and successful industries. In the earlier days, saddle-making was the more prominent branch, but in later times there is less of that, and more of harness-work. Capt. Oliver Lund, the pioneer in the business, came to this town, on horseback, from Nashua, in 1797, bringing his kit of tools with him, guided on his way by marked trees, and here spent nearly the whole of his long life at his trade. Asa Wilcox learned his trade with Mr. Lund, and went West. Thomas Wait, a good mechanic, had a shop here for a number of years, but he had sad domestic afflictions, which resulted in serious pecuniary embarrassments. James Wheeler, a son of Dea. Nathaniel Wheeler, of Croydon, was here from 1816 until his death, in 1832, and did a thriving business. William P. Wheeler spent much of his minority with his uncle James, and at his death assumed the responsibility of the business, though only twenty years of age; but at the end of five years he turned his attention to law, graduated at the Harvard Law School, and went into the practice of his profession at Keene, N. H. He was succeeded by David H. Hale, a son of Dr. William Hale, of Hollis, who, at the end of two years, sold out, and went to California. Edmund Wheeler, who had commenced his trade with his brother, William P., in 1833, purchased the establishment of Mr. Hale in 1839, and had a successful business, which he continued until 1866, a portion of the time in partnership with Granville Pollard, when he sold out to G. & E. A. Pollard, the present owners. Nathaniel F. Lund was in business with his father for a short time. William F. Young was with Mr. Hale and Mr. Wheeler a number of years, but went to Lowell, Mass., where he became an editor. He subsequently became a merchant in Boston, where he now resides. Edwin R. George was here some five years, when he sold out and went to Bristol. Giles O. Thompson, now in business at Franklin, was with Wheeler & Pollard four years. Bela G. & Charles R. Jones had a shop in town for a while. Charles H. Watts commenced here in 1864. Hamlet W. Belknap was with Mr. Watts as a workman. Silas B. Call, a son of Stephen, learned his trade, and was with E. Wheeler four years, when he went to San Luis, Obispo, Cal., where he has had a successful career, and amassed a fortune.

SHINGLES. The first shingle-machine introduced into this town was by Abijah W. Tenney, in 1830. It was Earl's patent, and was put into the Parmelee mills, at Southville, where it was run for several years. Stephen Parker had a machine at the Diamond mill for a short time, where shingles were cut, instead of being sawed; ash timber, steamed, was used. Machines for sawing shingles have been introduced into nearly all the saw-mills in town, and it has become an extensive and profitable business.

SHOEMAKERS. Daniel Dudley was the first shoemaker and tanner in town. During the earlier years Nathaniel Sheldon and others went about from house to house doing the shoemaking, the people where they went furnishing the stock. Rev. Bial Ladoyt and Robert Durkee made shoes at the old Baptist Hill village, above the H. Brown place. David Wheeler, Sylvanus Knapp, and Isaac Hanson worked at Northville; Levi Sholes and Hutchison Sholes on Thatcher hill; John Hunton, Daniel Dudley, John Russ, Calvin Messenger, Chase Noyes, Amos Noyes, Luke Atwood, Sawyer Belknap, William H. Belknap, Abijah Dudley, F. P. Dudley, C. E. Dudley, Joseph T. Chase, Ethan S. Chase, Alvah S. Chase, Dean S. Clement, B. C. Logue, Silas Kempton, E. M. Kempton, Charles Richards, Francis Boardman, and Daniel F. Patch at the village.

SILK. The mania for the raising and manufacture of silk prevailed here between 1838 and 1850. It was introduced by Calvin Messinger. The first mulberry used for the raising of silk not proving satisfactory, it was soon supplanted by the Morus multicaulis, in which for a time there was a wild speculation. Mr. Messinger and the Rev. John Woods built a large cocoonery, in which they fed the worms. Silk was manufactured into thread, twist, handkerchiefs, vests, aprons, and dress patterns. Dea. Henry Chapin, in the north-west part of the town, raised silk, and was engaged in its manufacture by water-power. During the year 1840 he manufactured a large quantity from silk from the worm. John Puffer & Co. had a factory at the Scribner mill, where they made a large quantity of thread from raw silk, domestic and foreign. Rev. John Woods and Amos Gleason had a factory at the Diamond mills for a number of years. Col. Jacob Reddington and Amos Little, Esq., were also engaged in the business and speculations;—but the climate proving too rigorous for the successful production of the article, the business was abandoned. In 1843, Amos Little, Esq., wore to the legislature garments made of silk of home production, in which he presented a petition praying for bounty and protection to silk producers.

STOVES AND TIN. L. Baldwin & Co. had a stove and tin shop, standing at the east of Wheeler's block, in 1829. Seth Richards furnished the stoves for this community for a number of years. Wood & Orvis opened the first important manufacture of tin and stoves in town in 1842. It has since been carried on by Mr. Orvis, Robinson & Orvis, Jacob Robinson, Robinson & Wilcox, Sibley & Hatch, C. Wilcox & Son, Hatch & Stowell, and S. G. Stowell & Son, and has become an important business.

SCYTHES. The manufacture of scythes by water-power was first introduced into this town by Stephen Dexter, previous to 1787. His shop was just below the village grist-mill. David Dexter was connected with him for a while in the business. When Mr. Dexter removed his business to Claremont, he sold out here to Ruel Keith, who in turn sold to Samuel Church, Jr. John Parmelee, who learned his trade with Mr. Dexter, had a shop at the falls in the south part of the town, where he continued in business until his death. Sylvanus Larned built the factory at Northville, in 1842, where he carried on business, a part of the time in connection with Mr. Sibley, until his death.

They were succeeded in business by Sibley & Dunton. Since the termination of their partnership, Mr. Sibley has carried on the business. In 1873 he rebuilt and greatly enlarged his manufactory, and admitted his son, Frank A., as a partner. In 1870 Mr. Sibley employed 14 hands, used nearly 44,000 pounds of steel and iron, and made 30,000 scythes;—wages paid, $7,500.

TAILORS. William Brittain, the first tailor in town, began his labors as early as 1774, by making leather breeches, going from house to house to do his work. Samuel Church soon after opened the first shop for the business near the Call place. For many years the work was done mainly by females, Eunice Comstock being prominent among the workers. Dr. Arnold Ellis was among the early operators. Naylor Starbird commenced as early as 1828, and spent most of his life here. J. H. Fuller, H. P. Gront, C. C. Chadborne, F. Kelley, L. H. Chase, Ira Mitchell, B. F. Tibbetts, L. White & Co., William Alexander, J. W. Clement, A. V. Hitchcock, John O. Hobbs, M. W. Burke, and John Lyons have since been engaged in the business. It is now a very important branch of trade. In 1870 Mr. Hobbs employed ten hands, and Mr. Hitchcock eight. On the death of Mr. Hobbs, in 1875, Messrs. Moony & Meserve purchased his large stock, and continued the business at Richards block. Young & Hutchinson opened an establishment in Wheeler's block in 1876, where they have had a liberal patronage.

TANNERS. Tanning, during the earlier days, was not so much of a business as at the end of the century. They had no large establishments, little machinery, few conveniences, and far less skill than at present. It was a slow, laborious process. They had each only a few vats. Their bark was crushed by hand in a samp mortar, which consisted of a hole made in a rock, in the form of an old-style iron kettle, into which was thrown the bark, which was beaten up by a long, flat stone, with a smooth round end, called a pestle. Upper-leather was tanned during the summer, and curried in the winter, while sole-leather, after being handled during the summer months, was barked down for the winter, and was a whole year in tanning. Hides were most frequently tanned for the farmers upon shares. Of the men who operated during this period, we might name Jonathan Comstock, who tanned at Kelleyville; Nathaniel Fisher, at the foot of Claremont hill; Moses P. Durkee, at his house, at the H. Brown place, in the north part of the town; Levi Sholes, on Thatcher hill, at the A. G. Savory place; and John Hunton, where the Phenix hotel now stands.

At a later period the business was confined to the limits of the present village. Improved machinery and new processes had been invented. The bark was now crushed by means of a large stone in the form of a mill-stone, but much larger. Through the centre of this stone was passed a horizontal shaft, or axle-tree, one end of which was attached to a central post, around which it revolved. To the other end was attached the horse. Upon a platform, underneath the circle marked by the stone, was placed the bark; and while a boy drove the horse, the man was engaged in shoving the finer particles to the centre, while he raked the coarser pieces under the track. The operators at this time were Luther Henderson, at the E. Wheeler house, and the upper tannery; A. M. Woodard at the Phenix hotel; and John Hunton, Moses P. Durkee, Ira Dwinell, and John B. Stowell, at the lower tannery.

During the subsequent time, dating back a full third of a century, since the introduction of chemicals, the steam boiler, by Asa Richardson, in 1835, the fulling mill, splitting-machine, and other radical improvements, and increased capital and facilities for transport, large quantities of foreign hides have been brought to town, the products of which have been sent to Boston and other markets. It has been one of the most important and successful branches of business in town. Since then the business has been confined to the present localities. The lower tannery was originally built by John Hunton. It has been carried on successively by John Hunton, Moses P. Durkee, 1826; Ira Dwinell, John B. Stowell, 1828; Asa Richardson, Charles R. Beard, Hunton & Jones, Hunton & Dill, John W. Hunton, Rounsevel & Jackson, and at present by Lyman Rounsevel. The original building having been burned in 1868, it was rebuilt the same year by John H. Hunton, on a much more extensive and substantial plan.

The upper tannery, built by Luther Henderson, has been owned since by William Mitchell and F. W. Henderson, John McCullough, Alpheus Pierce, Jabez Thompson, Cheney Chase, Benjamin F. Sawyer, Hunton & Ladd, and John H. Hunton.

The capital employed in the two tanneries in 1870 was $30,000; number of hands, 24; pay-roll, $11,000; value of products, $76,000.

TURNING. Col. Jacob Reddington had a shop at the Diamond mill, where he turned all sorts of wooden ware. Adams Dickey once had a last factory at the same place.

WALLET-MAKERS. Oliver Lund and James Wheeler for many years supplied this community with wallets and pocket-books. Nathaniel Cooper, and afterwards John Boyd, had a shop devoted to the manufacture of wallets. William O. Hopkins had a manufactory of wallets and pocket-books in Wheeler's block, commencing in 1863, employing some twelve hands in the shop and thirty outside stitchers, doing a business of $20,000 a year.

WHIPS. Norman McGregor for several years carried on an extensive manufacture of high-cost whips at his shop near the A. Wylie residence at Northville.

CHAPTER XVIII.

RELIGION.

BAPTIST CHURCH.

BY REV. HALSEY C. LEAVITT.

IN the year 1770, a colony came, mainly from Worcester county, Mass., and settled in the north-western portion of Newport and the south-western portion of Croydon. These were many of them members of Baptist churches, or Baptists in sentiment. Hence the name of Baptist hill, as the long rise of ground was then called which lies north of Northville on the old road leading to Croydon, on which was a school-house where they met to worship.

In 1779, Rev. Caleb Blood, of Marlow, addressed a letter to the Warren Association, by which they were induced to send two missionaries into New Hampshire, to labor a few months in the western section of the state. Rev. Job Seamans, of Attleborough, Mass., and Rev. Bial Ledoyt, of Woodstock, Conn., were selected to perform this service.

In May of the same year a small number of the followers of Christ were organized into a church, and recognized as the Baptist church of Newport and Croydon. It was, however, soon after known only by its present name,—Newport church. The constituent members were as follows: Seth Wheeler, Elias Metcalf, William Haven, Ezekiel Powers, Mrs. Seth Wheeler, Mrs. Elias Metcalf, Mrs. William Haven, and Mrs. Nathaniel Wheeler. Seth Wheeler, a man of marked ability, was chosen deacon. Elder Ledoyt was installed as first pastor of this church, Oct. 3, 1791. Elder Job Seamans, afterwards of New London, preached on the occasion from Acts 20:20.

In 1798, the church erected a house of worship forty-four feet square, adjoining the cemetery at Northville. The following description of this church edifice, and the worship and habits of the people, as they appeared in 1810, is from the pen of the late Baron Stowe, D. D., of Boston :

I am in that plain edifice, with a superabundance of windows and a porch at each end, with its elevated pulpit, sky blue in color, overhung by the sounding-board ; with the deacon's seat, half-way up the pulpit, with the square pews occupied by families, with a gallery containing one row of pews fronted by the singers' seats. There is the horse-shed ; there is the horse-block ; there are the horses, with men's saddles and pillions, and a few women's saddles, but not a carriage of any description.

On occasions of baptism, the whole congregation would go down the hill, and, standing in a deep glen on the banks of Sugar river, would witness the ceremonies.

Elias McGregor played the bass-viol, Asa, a brother, led the choir, and his sisters Lucy and Lois sang soprano and alto. In that choir were Asaph Stowe, Moses Paine Durkee, Philip W. Kibbey, and more than one of the Wakefields.

In the year 1800, Elder Ledoyt requested and received his dismission. Soon after, Rev. Thomas Brown, formerly of Morristown, N. J., became pastor. During his ministry there was an extensive revival, in which the whole town shared. He was dismissed in 1813.

In 1815 Rev. Elisha Hutchinson, A. M., formerly of Pomfret, Vt., accepted a call to this church, and was ordained in December of the same year. He was pastor of this church about three years.

In 1816 there settled in town a young man by the name of Solomon Howe, who was an Arminian in sentiment, and who opposed Mr. Hutchinson in his views of divine purposes. By his discussions he created sorrowful dissensions. The breach continued to widen, until the disaffected and larger party withdrew, and formed an independent Baptist church, with Mr. Howe as their pastor.

In 1818 a few resolved to make one more vigorous effort to maintain the visibility of the church. These sent delegates, with a letter, to the association then sitting at Mount Holly, Vt., and were recognized instead of the opposing party.

Mr. James Parsons, of Boston, who was ordained by this church, October 7, 1819, as an evangelist, preached for some months with great success. He was followed by Bradbury Clay, of Nottingham West, N. H. The converts "universally ascribed both their conviction and conversion to the sovereign mercy of God, through the mediation and intercession of his Son. All consented to the law, that it was good, and to grace, that it was free." This revival proved the death-blow to those opposing the divine purposes of God; and but a few years intervened before most of them came humbly back to the fold, where they were gladly received. From Nov. 8, 1818, to Sept. 30, 1819, 110 united with the church.

A revival began in June, 1820, in the academy, which was under the care of W. Shedd, of Boston. From the academy it spread to the village, where "old and young, rich and poor, the rigid moralist and the abandoned profligate, indiscriminately shared in the forgiving mercy of God." As a result of this awakening, twenty were added to the church. The church and society were incorporated in June of this year (1820).

During the summer of 1821, through the active labor of Col. Cheney, who had been recently converted, they erected a house of worship at the village, its dimensions being 64 by 44 feet. In March the materials were in the forest, and in June the building was raised without accident. It was dedicated Oct. 11. Rev. J. Elliot preached the dedicatory sermon from Haggai 2:9.

In July of this year (1821) the Rev. Ira Person, of Hartland, Vt., began his labors with this people. He proved to be the most successful pastor they have ever had. During this his first pastorate, which ended in the year 1834, nearly two hundred were baptized.

For about nine months from this time the pulpit was supplied by Edward Peterson. Some time in the spring of 1836, Rev. Orin Tracy came here from New London. He preached for about two years.

In the spring of 1838, the question of slavery became a fruitful source of contention. Bro. Person, seeing their need of a pastor, left his field of labor in Chester, Vt., to restore, by the blessing of God, harmony to this people. In the month of September, Rev. Mr. Grant came here as an evangelist. He preached for six weeks, and after a little the revival began with power. Bro. Grant was followed by Rev. Mr. Walden, who preached with great success. Brethren then felt it a privilege to come day and night, from distant portions of the town, that they might render to God a tribute of praise and worship. This revival resulted in the addition to the church of 129.

Mr. Person served the church, in this his second pastorate, four years and eight months. In all, his labors extended over a period of eighteen years and eight months. During this time some 400 united with the church,—about 350 by baptism. Father Person, having retired from active labor of nearly sixty years, lives in this town, where he councils the church, and still continues to pray for the prosperity of Zion. [See Genealogy.]

Mr. Person was followed by Joseph Freeman, D. D., of Cavendish, Vt., who remained here about four years. The Rev. Wm. M. Guilford became pastor in 1847, and resigned in 1851.

Rev. P. S. Adams, of Georgetown, Mass., was installed over this church Nov. 15, 1851. Several were baptized the following month; eleven in 1852. The following year became a season of marked interest, during which ninety were added to the church. Mr. Adams remained here until Sept. 21, 1856, when he was, at his own request, dismissed to the church in Brattleborough, Vt.

The Rev. James Andrews was installed June 18, 1857, and resigned in August, 1858. Rev. Mylon Merriam became pastor Oct. 17, 1858, and resigned Sept. 4, of the next year. Rev. W. H. Watson began his labors here in May, 1861. His resignation was presented and accepted the following month.

In April, 1862, the church extended a call to David James. He accepted their invitation, and was ordained June 3. During the years 1864 and 1865 there were seventeen additions. He closed his labors here in 1866.

Mr. James's successor was Rev. Foster Henry, who entered upon his charge July 8, 1866. In 1867 and 1868 a good, commodious parsonage was built. In 1870, the church edifice was rebuilt, at an expense of $8,800. The corner-stone was laid July 8, 1870, by the now venerable Mr. Person. The house was dedicated Dec. 7, of the same year, there being present

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

BY REV. G. R. W. SCOTT.

In June, 1766, eight young men, from Killingworth, Conn., came into the town of Newport (chartered five years before), to form a permanent settlement. On the first Sabbath after their arrival they met under a tree, and there united in praising God, by prayer and song and reading his word. It is a remarkable fact, that since these young men met under that tree, to the present time, the Congregationalists have never permitted a Sunday to pass without meeting for religious worship. The early settlers, after that first meeting, met for six or seven years in a private house, where they listened to one of their number, who conducted the religious exercises, and read sermons from printed volumes.

In 1773 a house was built, to be used for religious worship on the Lord's day, and as a school-house during the week. Thus we see that the fathers of the town were desirous of building upon Christ and a sound education. The character of these early settlers was such as to attract attention, and they soon received considerable accessions to their number.

Few details of these early times have been preserved. It is certain, however, that prior to the 26th of June, 1775, the people had obtained the services of a regular preacher; for it is found recorded that upon that day a committee was appointed to confer with Mr. Eliezer Sweetland, to see if he was willing to preach the gospel in Newport "for some time longer."

On May 4, 1778, a vote was taken to instruct a committee to confer with Rev. Thomas Kendal, "to see if he will return to this town as soon as he can with convenience, after he hath accomplished his purposed journey."

On March 15, 1779, a committee was appointed to make application to Rev. Mr. Hall, of Keene, to look out for a man to settle over the proposed church.

On Oct. 28, 1779, a meeting was held by the Congregationalists to organize a church. The Rev. Aaron Hall, being the only minister from abroad, acted as moderator. Aaron Buell was chosen scribe. Articles of faith, form of covenant, and rules of discipline were adopted and signed on that day, by

On Dec. 6, 1779, a committee was appointed to confer with Mr. Tracy, and "desire him to tarry and preach the gospel four Sabbaths longer, if they could discern a probability of his settling, or a disposition in him to settle with the people of this town as a preacher at some future time, if circumstances admitted of it; if not, to proceed." The people, though they were extremely desirous of having a settled minister, would not insist too much upon Mr. Tracy's coming. It seems that Mr. Tracy "proceeded" on his way, for we find, shortly after this, that a young man, Mr. Samuel Wood, was invited to preach; and at a meeting held Aug. 7, 1780, it was voted to ask the above-named gentleman to preach "two Sabbaths longer on probation." On the 24th of the same month, a call was given to

Mr. Wood. He was offered £100 as settlement, and £45 per year as salary, which was to be increased £5 per year until it reached £70. This call was not accepted.

It would seem, judging from the hints given in the records, that the revival, which took place shortly after the formation of the church, was during the stay of Mr. Wood. As the fruit of this refreshing, about thirty were added to the church.

After this, Jan. 22, 1783, the church and town having a short time before given him a call, the Rev. John Remele was installed as the first pastor of the Congregational church. He was dismissed Oct. 10, 1791. During this year an effort was made "to procure Mr. Bliss, or any other gospel minister, to preach the gospel in this town during the ensuing summer, or any longer or shorter term, as he may think proper."

On Nov. 7, 1791, it was voted that some land be procured from Mr. Absalom Kelsey, for the purpose of erecting a meeting-house upon it. Christopher Newton, Jeremiah Jenks, Phineas Chapin, Samuel Hurd, and Aaron Buell were appointed a committee to superintend the work. On Nov. 22, of the same year, the town voted to accept the doings of the meeting-house committee, and also voted to raise £200 for the purpose of defraying the cost of the above-mentioned house. This was in due time erected, and stood for many years upon the cone-like hill west of the present village.

Four years passed away without a pastor. It seemed as if the Lord had forgotten his people; but he had not. Mr. Abijah Wines was raised up from the ranks to lead the host. He left his farm, and entered the ministry Jan. 5, 1796. Many still remember that tall, large form. He was a good student and a successful pastor, for during his twenty-one years of work in this place the church enjoyed three revivals, and 212 were added to it. On. Nov. 26, 1816, Mr. Wines was dismissed. [See Genealogy.]

Two years after, Dec. 2, 1818, a young man from Dartmouth college, Mr. James R. Wheelock, a son of the late distinguished President Wheelock, of that institution, was ordained over the church. He was a man of talents, sensitive and enthusiastic, it may be impulsive. That he was a hard worker may be seen from the fact that during his little more than four years' stay—for he was dismissed Feb. 13, 1823—148 were added to the church.

It was during Mr. Wheelock's ministry, in 1822, that the present large and beautiful edifice was erected, which shows that the people then were far in advance of their time in liberality, sentiment, and taste. James Breck, Hubbard Newton, Capt. Elkanah Carpenter, and Caleb Heath were appointed the building committee, they building the church, paying the bills, and depending upon the sale of pews for reimbursement.

On Jan. 28, 1824, the Rev. John Woods, who had been pastor of the church in Warner, was installed over this church. For more than a quarter of a century this man of scholarly ability preached to this people. During his ministry 329 were added to the church. Near the close of his pastorate there resulted an unfortunate division, which for a time made the dear old church a target for the enemies of the cross, who, with sarcasm in the words, said, "See how these Christians love one another!" A large number, including several leading members of the church, withdrew from its communion, and uniting with others, who were Methodists in sentiment, formed the present Methodist church.

Time and grace have smoothed, it is hoped, the asperity of feeling. The daughter, though she walks not according to the polity of the mother, still retains some of the old Puritan leaven, and, with this and the "Roger Williams element" which she had drawn in, she has been the means of reaching many who otherwise would not have come under the sound of the gospel. The good Lord since then has brought order out of confusion.

On the same day, July 16, 1851, that the old pastor, Rev. John Woods, was dismissed, a young man, Henry Cummings, who had graduated not long before from Andover, was ordained. He came during a time of discouragement, when the church seemed weak. Although young and comparatively inexperienced, he had, to counterbalance these, a hearty love for Christ, a sound mind, and an earnest desire to do good. Near the beginning of his ministry, the interior of the church was repaired. The old pews were cut down, the floor raised, the pulpit lowered, and other changes made. Some time after Mr. Cummings's ordination, God's spirit was poured out upon this church, and also upon the other churches of the place. There are many who can testify to the purity of life, the devotion and love, of Mr. Cummings: 170 were added to the church during his ministry. He was dismissed July 25, 1866, and immediately after was settled over the Congregational church in Rutland, Mass., where he still remains.

In the summer of 1867, a young man, G. R. W. Scott, then at Andover, was invited to preach a year to this people. He accepted. During this year he was invited to settle as pastor. This invitation also he accepted, and was ordained Sept. 17, 1868. He was dismissed Dec. 7, 1873.—[He was an enthusiastic worker, and drew a full audience. Is pastor of a Congregational church at Fitchburg, Mass.—Ed.]

During the summer of 1869 the interior of the church edifice underwent a complete change, at an expense of nearly $8,000. The old pews on the floor and in the gallery were taken out; new circular pews, made of chestnut and trimmed with walnut, were placed on the lower floor, while some of the old pews, handsomely refitted, were made to do service again up stairs. The ceiling and walls were beautifully frescoed. A circular platform, made of chestnut and walnut, was built, upon which was placed an elegant walnut desk, the gift of the pastor. These, together with the chairs, carpet, etc., are the furnishment of the east end; while the large and handsome organ, the gift of Dexter Richards, Esq., is the attraction in the west end. Many other important improvements were made.

The present chapel was erected in 1871, at a cost of $6,000.

During the last years of Mr. Scott's pastorate, many were added to the church, thus showing that God has not forgotten to be gracious.

Immediately on the dismissal of Mr. Scott, the church and society obtained the services of the Rev. E. E. P. Abbott, a native of Concord, who supplied the desk until March, 1875, when he accepted a call to settle as their pastor. He was installed March 24, 1875.

The present parsonage was built by individual subscription, in 1877, at an expense of $3,500.

The fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the Sabbath-school, in connection with this church, was observed January 9, 1869.

Elkanah Carpenter, at his death, left a fund for the promotion of Christianity, which was to be used at the discretion of the pastor of the Congregational church. This fund was disposed of under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Woods.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

BY REV. C. W. MELLEN.

The history of Methodism in Newport is replete with interest. The space allotted us, however, will permit us to give only a brief synopsis of it.

Some sixty or seventy years since, Peter Wakefield, then a member of the Baptist church, rejected the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints. All efforts to reclaim him failing, he was expelled from their communion. At the time he had never heard a Methodist sermon nor read a Methodist book, yet he was really the founder of Methodism in Newport. The first Methodist preacher he heard was Elijah Hedding, since bishop, who at that time preached occasionally at Sunapee. Father Wakefield invited him here, and probably he preached the first Methodist sermon in Newport. In 1830 a class was formed, consisting of six persons. They were supplied by preachers of the Goshen circuit. Eleazer Jordan, Guy Beckley, John Cummings, Daniel Lee, Amos Kidder, Joseph Baker, John L. Smith, Nathaniel Ladd, and Chester W. Lewis occupied, in turn, the pulpit most of the Sabbaths from 1829 to 1836.

In 1840, or about that time, objections were made to the use of the school-house by the Methodists for religious services, in consequence of which Father Wakefield built a chapel at Northville, which is now standing, as good as new, and open for the use of all evangelical Christians. In 1843 the Miller excitement, which swept over the country, robbed this infant society, then in a flourishing condition, of all its male members except Father Wakefield and Brother N. O. Page. It seemed to them the setting of the sun ere 't was noon. It was, however, only the interception of a dark cloud. Methodism had not accomplished its mission here: it was not to be confined to the north portion of the town, but was to occupy a more central position, from which its light might radiate. Circumstances arose in the Congregational church which caused a secession of those Methodists who had joined it for the want of a church of their choice in the place, and also of many other highly respectable members. These proposed a permanent union with the Methodists at Northville, which being consented to, they asked the New Hampshire conference for a preacher. Accordingly, in May, 1850, Warren F. Evans was stationed among them. The Universalist chapel was secured as a place of worship. A good congregation was gathered. On the 30th of October, 1852, a society was organized under the discipline of the M. E. Church, consisting of N. O. Page, J. B. Hurd, N. Batchelder, F. Kelley, James Baker, Abner Whipple, Jacob Robinson, Joseph Sawyer, Jr., T. A. Twitchell, Elnathan Hurd, Henry Chapin, and their associates. Steps were taken to erect a church edifice. A central site was selected; and such was the progress of the work, that, Dec. 25, 1851, they were able to dedicate their house to the worship of Almighty God. Bro. Evans remained two years. They have since enjoyed the pastoral care of Sullivan Holman, A. C. Manson, J. W. Guernsey, D. P. Leavitt, John Currier, James Thurston, S. G. Kellogg, C. M. Dinsmore, Chas. Young, C. W. Mellen, Charles E. Hall, Elijah R. Wilkins, O. H. Jasper, and A. W. Bunker.

A good religious interest, with occasional conversions, has characterized the society from the beginning. Gracious revival influences visited it in the years 1852, 1853, and 1869. In 1854 grounds were purchased and a parsonage built, at an expense of about $2,000. Since then the church and grounds have been enlarged, an organ purchased, and improvements made to the amount of nearly $5,000. With such a record of prosperity; with a congregation large, intelligent, appreciative; with a Sabbath-school in a flourishing condition; and with a church membership of over two hundred, many of whom are eminent for their spirituality,—we are led to ask, not only “What hath God wrought?” but, What will he not accomplish with this powerful agency for good?

The New Hampshire conference of the M. E. Church was held here in May, 1853, and again, in April, 1873.

FREEWILL BAPTISTS. The Freewill Baptist church, which held a very conspicuous place in town for many years, had its origin, in 1816, in a division of the Baptist church, then at Northville. This division resulted mainly in diverse opinions in regard to what were deemed essential articles of faith. Becoming dissatisfied with their pastor, the Rev. Elijah Hutchinson, who preached the doctrine of fatality too strongly to suit them, the large body of the church and congregation withheld their support from him, and procured the services of the Rev. Solomon Howe, who was a disciple of Arminius. A council was called, and, after a patient hearing, decided that the Rev. Mr. Hutchinson and his adherents, holding more nearly to the true church doctrines, were entitled to be considered as the church. Whereupon the admirers of Mr. Howe and his doctrines, cut off from the church by their belief and by the action of the council, organized as a Freewill Baptist church. Under the ministration of Mr. Howe, and subsequently that of Rev. Elijah Watson, the church had full congregations, and enjoyed a large measure of success. The Rev. Mr. Goodale succeeded Mr. Watson, and continued to preach until after the introduction of Methodism, when a portion of the church united with that order, and the organization, in 1834, was given up. The following year, mainly through the labors of the Rev. L. H. Stevens, formerly of Weare, it was renewed, and continued for several years.

Among the difficult problems to be solved in the separation of the church was the question as to which side was entitled to occupy the house. The contest was for a while quite animated; and from Sabbath to Sabbath the question was solved for the day by allowing the first on the ground to occupy the pulpit for the day, while the others would retire to the school-house for worship. The question was finally settled, when Mr. Hutchinson and his friends removed their place of worship to the new church at the village, and left Mr. Howe the undisputed occupancy of the house.

For many years Nathaniel Wheeler and Abel Wheeler were deacons of this church. They were succeeded in their offices by Abel Wheeler, Jr., and Ira Wakefield.

The quarterly meetings of this church, at which were usually present several men of commanding talents, were always seasons of great interest, and drew crowded houses.

Mr. Howe, the first preacher, was a native of Hillsborough, and was licensed to preach at Washington in 1812; came to this town in 1815, and was here ordained, July 5, 1819. He removed to New York in 1827, and died at Smyrna, in that state, in 1858, at the age of 72 years. His preaching was plain, easily understood, and often startling and pathetic. Mr. Watson was a fluent and forcible talker, and quite a revivalist. The Rev. David Marks, who died at Oberlin, Ohio, in 1845, a most eloquent divine, often preached to this church, and was a great favorite, though never an ordained pastor here, as we can learn.

UNIVERSALISTS. The Universalist Society of Newport was organized on the 11th of February, 1830. Meetings were held at the town hall and court-room until 1837, when their chapel was built. Among those who have ministered to this society are Revs. John Moore, William S. and Aaron L. Balch, W. S. and Levi Ballou, Walter Harriman, Ezekiel Dow, Lemuel Willis, Luther Walcott, Thompson Barron, J. T. Powers, and Joseph Barbor. They were mostly men of fine talents. Moore was afterwards a candidate for governor, and died suddenly at Concord. The former Balch became eminent as a traveller and lecturer; Harriman turned his attention to politics, and became governor of New Hampshire; while Powers, whose sermons were always adorned with sparkling imagery, became a contributor to the leading magazines.

THE UNITARIAN SOCIETY was formed Sept. 30, 1873. Rev. G. F. Piper was installed pastor Dec. 10, 1873. A large share of its members had previously belonged to the Universalist society, or had been its patrons, and the meetings of the new society were held in their chapel. Soon after its organization, the Hon. Edmund Burke presented the society with a new organ. At the close of the year Mr. Piper left, and his place was supplied by Rev. A. S. Nickerson. During 1876 and 1877, the church was remodelled and modernized. In 1878 the Rev. Geo. W. Patten was engaged as pastor.

ROMAN CATHOLIC. The first Roman Catholic service in town was held in 1854. Regular services of the church have been continued since 1870. They have a membership of 150. Since Dec., 1873, they have occupied the old Masonic hall, in Burke's block, for church purposes. Rev. Father O'Sullivan, of Claremont, the pastor, visits them and holds public services once a month.

MILLERISM. The old church at Northville was the headquarters for the disciples of the pseudo prophet Miller, for a large section of the surrounding country, during the excitement which prevailed in the fall and winter of 1842 and the spring of 1843. Here documents were distributed, and here meetings, enthusiastic, large, and long-continued, were held. The Rev. Mr. Hines and other eminent apostles of the faith, from Boston, were present. It is difficult for one, not an eye-witness, adequately to conceive of the wild frenzy which prevailed, as approached the fourth of April, that portentous day when they were to see the world enveloped in flames which should burn it up and all the wicked, while they were themselves to be caught up in the clouds. The impassioned eloquence of their speeches, and the thrilling strains of music, in which the whole congregation joined, contributed to intensify the feelings of the hour. When the day was passed, and the delusion was over, most of them returned to their farms and the business which they had been neglecting.

SPIRITUALISTS have held circles in town, and for several years have had frequent public meetings, which have been addressed by mediums and eminent apostles of the faith. Several families are adherents to its doctrines.

SECOND ADVENT. The doctrine of a Second Advent has had apostles and believers in this town, most of them residing in the Northville district. Rev. Calvin N. Fletcher, Rev. William W. Southerland, and Rev. John B. Libbey are among its more prominent teachers.

Newport has furnished the following clergymen, natives and former residents. A fuller account of them will be found in the Genealogy :

MISSIONARIES. The churches have always taken a lively interest in the cause of missions, both home and foreign, and have contributed generously to their support. The first church, the Baptist, at the north part of the town, was gathered by the Rev. Bial Ledoyt, a missionary sent here by a society in Rhode Island. The first missionary from town was Dea. Josiah Stevens, the father of the Stevens family in town. Melvina J. Chapin, a sister of Dea. D. B. Chapin, married the Rev. Geo.

B. Rowell, a graduate of Dartmouth college, and a son of the Rev. Mr. Rowell, of Cornish, and went to the Sandwich Islands, where they have exerted a beneficent influence upon the habits and religion of the natives.

Elizabeth Forbes, daughter of Charles Forbes, and granddaughter of Col. Wm. Cheney, afterwards wife of Wm. Moore, upon her marriage went with her husband as missionary to Burmah, where they resided six years. The loss of voice, from which he never recovered, disqualified him for the duties of his mission, and they returned home.

Jennie E. Chapin, daughter of Wm. A. Chapin, was sent out in 1871, by the A. B. C. F. Missions, as a missionary to Peking, China.

Charles Preston, son of Margaret, and grandson of William McAllister, has been a devoted and efficient missionary in China for seventeen years.

Mrs. Sarah J. Hale has for many years been president of the "Woman's Union Missionary Society" at Philadelphia. She has written much for the cause, and has made several very valuable reports, which have been printed and widely circulated. Under her superintendence the society has been most prosperous, and has been the means of doing much good.

As illustrating the spirit of our people, it is related that the widow of Mr. Simeon Chamberlin, in her very old age, while on the verge of the grave, as the last act of her Christian life, when her worldly fortune, once abundant, had all been swept away by sad reverses, and she reduced to the scantiest penury, as the only offering she could make, unravelled a scarf once worn by her husband, and, knitting it into stockings, came, with a trembling step and a countenance as if radiant with divine blessings, and laid them upon the altar of missions.

CHRISTMAS. A public observance of the Christmas festival was first introduced into this town by the Universalist society, and was kept up by them for several years. It was shortly after adopted, and most successfully carried forward, by the Methodists. The first recognition of the day by the Congregational church was in 1871, on which occasion the house, then newly refitted, was brilliantly illuminated, and a large number of valuable presents distributed.

CHAPTER XIX.

LITERATURE.

REV. CARLOS WILCOX [see sketch] was the first of the natives of the town to be enrolled among the literary men of the country. A volume is extant containing some of his more able sermons, together with several of his poems, and an account of his life and labors. Among his poems, "The Age of Benevolence" and "The Religion of Taste" are productions of much merit. The latter of these was pronounced before the Phi Beta Kappa Society, of Yale college. Extracts from both appear in other literary publications of the country.

BENJAMIN TEALL, the old schoolmaster, who lived on the Unity road, was a sort of poet laureate to the old Republican party, of which he was an enthusiastic member. He was a Revolutionary patriot, and at ninety years of age wrote many beautiful poems, which were published. He was the discoverer of Unity Springs, now so justly celebrated, and built there a little shelter, where he spent much of his time during the summer months, and where he composed many of his poems.

MRS. SARAH J. HALE, wife of David Hale, Esq., and daughter of Gordon Buell, has been an editor of the Lady's Book, the leading ladies' magazine of the country, for half a century. By the high tone and well sustained intellectual vigor of this journal, and by her numerous and varied publications during the time, both in poetry and prose,—some of them of rare merit,—she is entitled to the first rank among the writers of her native town, and is among the most distinguished female writers of the country. Her "Woman's Record," a volume of nearly a thousand pages, has passed through several editions, and has been widely circulated, both in this country and in Europe. It is her most elaborate work, and ranks highest among her prose productions; and her poem, entitled "Mississippi," written during the Rebellion, is among her finest poetical inspirations. The following account of herself and her works is from her own pen, and from "Allibone's Dictionary of Authors:—"

Having been requested by the editor of a work illustrating the history of Newport, N. H., to communicate some particulars respecting myself and family, and feeling a deep interest in all that concerns my native town, I submit a few papers on the subject, which may interest my early friends and be acceptable to the readers of the book. What I have been able to effect, having an interest for the public, is chiefly through my writings;—to these, then, my remarks will be principally confined.

My parents, Gordon Buell, of Killingsworth, and Martha Whittlesey, of Saybrook, both towns of some importance in Connecticut, removed to Newport, soon after the close of the War of Independence. My great-grandfather, Dea. Daniel Buell, of Killingsworth, was one of the proprietors of Newport, and my father settled upon lands belonging to him. This land possessed a valuable tract of pine forest. Before the Revolution, the charter of the town exacted that "all pine trees should be preserved for the use of the Royal Navy." I mention these trees, as they were objects of great interest to me in my childhood. This farm of 400 acres was my birthplace and home. I had two brothers, older than myself,—Charles Whittlesey Buell and Horatio Buell,—and a younger sister. My parents brought with them into the wilderness of the North that love of learning and those strict religious observances which distinguish the inhabitants of the Charter state. But good schools could not at once be established in the new settlements, and I owe my early predilection for literary pursuits to the teachings and example of my mother. A few words respecting the influences which have probably caused me to become the chronicler of my own sex may not be considered egotistical.

The books to which I had access were few, very few, in comparison with the number given children nowadays; but they were such as required to be studied—and I did study them. Next to the Bible and "The Pilgrim's Progress," my earliest reading was Milton, Addison, Pope, Johnson, Cowper, Burns, and a portion of Shakespeare. I did not obtain all his works till I was nearly fifteen. The first regular novel I read was "The Mysteries of Udolpho," when I was quite a child. I name it on account of the influence it exercised over my mind. I had remarked, that of all the books I saw, few were written by Americans, and none by women. Here was a work, the most fascinating I had ever read, always excepting "The Pilgrim's Progress," written by a woman! How happy it made me! The wish to promote the reputation of my own sex, and to do something for my own country, was among the earliest mental emotions I can recollect. This love of country was deeply engraved on my heart, by reading, when I was not more than ten years old, Ramsey's "History of the American Revolution." It made me a patriot for life. These feelings have had a salutary influence by directing my thoughts to a definite object;—my literary pursuits have had an aim beyond self-seeking of any kind.

The moral power of woman, which I had learned to appreciate from my mother, was strongly influential in my literary pursuits, as is apparent in my largest work, "Woman's Record." I sought to make this work an assistant in home education, hoping the examples shown and characters portrayed might have an inspiration and a power in assisting the moral progress of society. Yet I cannot close without adverting to the ready and kind aid I have always met with from those men with whom I have been most nearly connected. To my brother Horatio I owe what knowledge I have of Latin, of the higher branches of mathematics, and of mental philosophy. He often regretted that I could not, like himself, have the privilege of a college education.

To my husband I was more deeply indebted. He was some years my senior, and greatly my superior in knowledge. We commenced, soon after our marriage, a system of study and reading, which we pursued while he lived. The hours allotted were from eight o'clock in the evening until ten—two hours in twenty-four. How I enjoyed those hours! In all our mental pursuits, it seemed the aim of my husband to enlighten my reason, strengthen my judgment, and give me confidence in my own powers of mind, which he estimated more highly than I

MRS. HALE'S LITERARY PRODUCTIONS.

HALE, MRS. SARAH JOSEPHA, formerly Miss Buell, of Newport, New Hampshire, is the widow of David Hale, a distinguished lawyer, who died at an early age in 1822. In 1828 Mrs. Hale became the editress of the Ladies' Magazine, published at Boston, and discharged the duties of this responsible position until 1837, when this periodical was united with the Lady's Book, of Philadelphia. With this well-known and truly popular magazine Mrs. Hale has ever since been connected, and since 1841 she has been a resident of Philadelphia. The following list of this lady's productions evinces an extraordinary amount of literary industry: 1. "The Genius of Oblivion, and other Original Poems." Concord: 1823. 2. "Northwood: A Novel." Boston: 1827—two vols. Republished in London, also in New York, in 1852. 12mo. 3. "Sketches of American Character." Philadelphia. 18mo. 4. "Traits of American Life"—1835. 2 vols., 12mo. 5. "Flora's Interpreter." Boston. Reprinted in London. 6. "The Ladies Wreath." Boston. 12mo. 7. "The Way to Live Well, and to Be Well while we Live." 8. "Grosvenor: A Tragedy"—1838. 9. "Alice Ray: a Romance in Rhyme"—1846. 10. "Harry Guy, the Widow's Son," in verse. Boston: 1848. 11. "Three Hours; or, The Vigil of Love, and other Poems." Philadelphia: 1848. 12. "The Poet's Offering: edited by Mrs. Hale." Philadelphia. 13. "Good's Book of Nature (abridged): edited by Mrs. Hale." 14. "Ladies' New Book of Cookery, and Complete Housewife (new edition)." New York: 1852. 12mo. 15. "A Complete Dictionary of Poetical Quotations." Philadelphia: 1852. 8vo. 16. "The Judge: a Drama of American Life." 17. "New Household Receipt Book—1853. 12mo. 18. "Woman's Record; or, Sketches of Distinguished Women from the beginning till A. D. 1850." New York: 1853. 8vo. New edition. 1856. This work, by far the most important of Mrs. Hale's productions, though in some points open to criticism, may yet be justly commended as an invaluable manual for the library shelf and parlor table. 19. "Liberia; or, Mr. Peyton's Experiments: edited by Mrs. Hale"—1853. 12mo. 20. "The Bible Reading-Book." Philadelphia: 1854. 12mo. 21. "The Letters of Mme. de Sévigné to her Daughter and Friends." New York: 1856. 12mo. 22. "The Letters of Lady Mary W. Montague—1856. 12mo. In addition to the labors here enumerated, Mrs. Hale has edited several annuals,—“The Opal,” “The Crocus,” etc.,—prepared a number of books for the young, and contributed enough matter, in the way of tales, essays, and poems, to fill several large volumes.

Since the publication of Allibone's Dictionary, Mrs. Hale, besides continuing her editorship of the Lady's Book, has published (23) “Happy Homes and Good Society all the Year Round;” (24) “Love; or, Woman's Destiny;” (25) “The Mother's Legacie;” and has revised her selections from Madame de Sévigné and Lady Montague. She has also revised and enlarged “Woman's Record,” which has lately appeared from the press of the Harpers. This edition has received special notices from the press, of which we give the following, written by Prof. John S. Hart:

Woman's Record. By Mrs. Sarah Josepha Hale. 918 pp., royal 8vo. New York: Harper & Brothers. A third edition of a work of such magnitude as this, after so short a time from its first appearance, is no slight attestation to its solid value. Mrs. Hale has done for her sex what Dr. Allibone has done for British and American authors. By long years of patient and persistent labor and research, she has gathered the authentic evidences of what the eminent ones of her own sex, in all ages of the world, have been and have done, and has placed the fruits of her labors in this noble and enduring Record.

We quote the following, not as illustrating the greatest inspiration of her womanhood,—but the one, as showing the early footprints of her young muse, and for the local interest it may have for all the dwellers upon the borders of the sweet stream it commemorates; and the other, as showing how one, after having passed ninety summers—most of them in active literary toil—can yet weave a beautiful garland.

ADDRESS TO SUGAR RIVER.

Let Avon roll with Shakspeare's deathless glory,
And Thames as smooth as Pope or Thomson glide,
The Tiber, Hellespont, in ancient story
Reflect Mars' triumphs, or fair Venus' pride;
While Scotia's every stream can boast its poet,
Whose Patriotic muse would make us know it:

Yet what to me are all these puffs and praises,
Or streams of fame in foreign lands that lie?
But my soft-gliding, native river raises
A thousand images of home-felt joy;
And though their names in lofty lays may shine,
In sweetness they can never equal thine.

Oh! may my verse, thy strength and beauty stealing,
Flow like thy waters, and thy fame extend!
Thou minglest with the tide of life's young feeling—
With thee my earliest recollections blend;—
Thy bank my bower, nor Eden's loss was pondered, Whilst there in infant innocence I wandered.

When strengthened reason woke imagination,
My book, my Cræsus wealth, oft borne to thee,
In some loved nook was sought a fav'rite station,
The spreading hazel formed a canopy;—
The red-breast, sweetest bird that charms our spring, Joined his wild warble to thy murmuring.

Oft from the page mine eye, with rapture glancing,
Watched the light-springing trout at sportive play,
Or the bright sunbeams o'er thy dimples dancing,
Or the blue sky that in thy bosom lay—
Here, the broad boughs athwart the dark stream waving,
And there, the wild duck's brood their plumage laving.

Nor must be past, while thousand thoughts endear 'em,
Thy Falls, my school-day path so often cross'd;
The wonder-hunting traveller would sneer 'em;
Beside Niag'ra's, these, be sure, were lost.
Oh! might I see that Anakim of wonders.
And watch its rain-bow'd spray, and hear its thunders!

But then I deemed not there could be a vaster,
When anchor-ice (we called it so) had made
Thy pent-up waters rage and roar, while faster
Whirl'd the white-sheeted foam; though half afraid,
Yet many a time I've paus'd to gaze and listen,
Till on my breath congealed the frost would glisten.

Those days are gone, and with them gone forever
Are many a lov'd companion, friend most dear;
As float the autumn leaves along yon river,
One moment seen, then eddyng disappear,—

So sink the race of men : thou, in thy prime,
Still roll'st unmark'd, unmanacled by Time.

But farewell, now, sweet stream ! In after ages,
When o'er the world Columbia sits a queen,—
Sung by her poets, honored by her sages
(An Athens without anarchy),—then seen,
And heard, too, shall some bard, though nurs'd on mountains,
Strike the loud harp that wakes thy triple fountains.

GROWING OLD.

Growing old ! growing old ! Do they say it of me ?

Do they hint my fine fancies are faded and fled ?
That my garden of life, like the winter-swept tree,
Is frozen and dying, or fallen and dead ?

Is the Heart growing old, when each beautiful thing
Like a landscape at eve, looks more tenderly bright,
And love sweeter seems, as the bird's wand'ring wing
Draws nearer her nest at the coming of night ?

Is the Mind growing old, when with ardor of youth
Through the flower-walks of Wisdom new paths it would try,
And seek, not for shells from the ocean of Truth,
But the Pearl of great price, which the World cannot buy ?

Is the Soul growing old ? See, the planet of even,
When rising at morn, melts in glory above :
Thus, turning from earth, we creep closer to Heaven,
Like a child to her father's warm, welcoming love.

Does the mortal grow older as years roll away ?
'Tis change, not destruction ;—kind winter will bring Fresh life to the germ, and perfect it. Decay
Holds the youth bud IMMORTAL, and heralds its spring.

Growing old, growing old ! Can it ever be true,
While joy for life's blessings is thankful and warm,
And hopes sown for others are blooming anew,
And the rainbow of Promise bends over the storm ?

Growing old, growing old ! No, we never grow old,
If, like little children, we trust in the WORD,
And, reckoning earth's treasures by Heaven's pure gold,
We lay our weak hands on the strength of the LORD.

HORATIO HALE, son of Sarah J. Hale, was author of "Wilkes's Expedition Around the World," published in several large volumes by authority and at the expense of the U. S. government. His peculiar talents as a linguist caused him, while yet an undergraduate at Harvard college, to be selected to accompany the expedition. Since his return his attention has been divided between literature and the law.

[From Allibone's Dictionary of Authors.]

HALE, HORATIO, b. May 3, 1817, graduated at Harvard college, in 1837, where he was so highly distinguished for his aptitude in the acquisition of languages, that whilst still an undergraduate he was selected to fill the post of philologist to the United States Exploring Expedition, commanded by Capt. Wilkes. The result of his learned investigations will be found in vol. vii,—“Ethnography and Philology,”—of the series of works which compose the history of that noble enterprise. Mr. Hale's intelligent labors have elicited warm commendation from highly respectable authorities, both at home and abroad. The distinguished English philologist, Dr. Latham, in his recent work on the “Natural History and Varieties of Man,” remarks that Mr. Hale's work contains “the greatest mass of philological data ever accumulated by a single inquirer.” The following lines give perhaps as good an account of this great work as could be conveyed in a brief description:

“The first 225 pages are devoted to Ethnography, or an account of the customs, religion, civil polity, and origin of the natives of the various countries and islands visited by the expedition. The remaining 440 pages comprise the Philology of the same regions. The various dialects of Polynesia are treated of under the general head of a comparative grammar of Polynesia, followed by a Polynesian lexicon. The languages of the Feejee Islands, the Kingsmills, Rotuma, Australia, the north-west coast of America, and some dialects of Patagonia and South Africa, come next under consideration. We feel assured that a glance at the work will excite surprise in all at the amount of information collected, and pleasure at the system and perspicuity with which the whole is presented.”—American Journal of Science.

An interesting account of Mr. Hale and his work will be found in the North American Review for July, 1846, to which we must refer our readers. It is no slight praise to award to an author that he has “succeeded in giving a certain classical completeness to his work, which makes it a model for future laborers in the same or similar fields of research. The style of this volume is marked by rare excellences, and those of the highest order. It is terse, compact, and business-like to a remarkable degree. * * It is a transparent medium of expression for a richly-informed, clear-thinking, straightforward mind; it presents the meaning of the writer strongly and directly to the mind of the reader, instructing while it gratifies."—North American Review,—ubi supra.

After the completion of this work, Mr. Hale visited Europe and other portions of the Eastern continent, and on his return was admitted to the bar. He is now engaged in the duties of his profession, but occasionally steals an hour from his briefs to contribute an essay on his favorite theme to some periodical in this country or in Great Britain.

REV. THOMAS BALDWIN, D. D., who occupied so prominent a place among the eminent divines of Boston, was once a preacher at Canaan, N. H., and while stationed there often supplied the pulpit at Baptist hill, in this town. Among his many able and charming productions was the hymn, commencing,—

"From whence doth this union arise,
That hatred is conquered by love?"

In after-life the Doctor was often heard to remark that this hymn had its origin and inspiration at a conference meeting at Newport, and was elaborated on his way home, by moonlight, beneath the shadows of Croydon mountain, amid the howling of wolves and other wild animals.

HUBBARD NEWTON, Esq., besides his editorial labors in connection with the Farmers' Advocate and Political Adventurer and the Northern Farmer, has written lectures upon various subjects, and has left on record several beautiful poems, which evince both culture and poetical inspiration.

NATHAN TAYLOR, an uneducated man, but endowed with waggish propensities, once wrote some doggerel lines entitled "Lost Benny Wines," on a simple boy who had wandered away and was lost, and was thought by some to have been killed. They were published at the time, and were the source of much amusement.

BENJAMIN B. FRENCH, the first clerk of our court, and for some years editor of the Spectator, had a poetical genius, and from his earliest boyhood, before his runaway marriage with the daughter of Chief-Justice Richardson, until the close of his

The first part of the book is devoted to a general survey of the history of the subject. It begins with a brief account of the early attempts to explain the phenomena of life, and then proceeds to a more detailed consideration of the various theories which have been advanced from time to time. The author shows how the scientific method has been applied to the study of life, and how the various branches of biology have been developed. He also discusses the influence of the various sciences on the progress of biology, and the influence of biology on the other sciences.

The second part of the book is devoted to a detailed consideration of the various theories which have been advanced to explain the phenomena of life. The author discusses the various theories of the origin of life, and the various theories of the development of life. He also discusses the various theories of the inheritance of characters, and the various theories of the variation of characters. The author shows how the scientific method has been applied to the study of life, and how the various branches of biology have been developed.

THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD

The scientific method is a method of inquiry which is based on the use of reason and observation. It is a method which is used to discover the laws of nature, and to explain the phenomena of life. The scientific method is based on the following principles: (1) The use of observation to discover the facts of nature. (2) The use of reason to deduce the laws of nature from the facts. (3) The use of experiment to test the laws of nature. (4) The use of the scientific method to explain the phenomena of life. life, indulged his pen in that direction. Two pieces published in the Spectator in 1828, the one entitled "Love and Poetry," and the other "Music and Poetry," had the jingle of the true poet. "Fitz Clarence," an extended and beautiful poem, was published in 1844, while chief clerk at the city of Washington. His most elaborate production, "Earth's Changes," was delivered before the Chapel Hill Institute, at Washington, D. C., in March, 1845. He wrote a hymn for the Historical Celebration of this town, in 1846, and several others adapted to special occasions in this town.

BARON STOW, D. D., besides his ministerial labors, was editor of the Columbian Star, a religious journal published at Washington, D. C., for a year and a half; was the author of several books and pamphlets, and wrote much for the periodical press.

REV. ALONZO KING wrote a memoir of George Dana Boardman, and several Sabbath-school books, which were full of interest, and widely circulated, besides a number of charming poems.

REV. LUTHER J. FLETCHER, a native of Croydon, son of David Fletcher, who spent his minority at Northville, in this town, has published a work entitled "Gloria Patria," a service-book, and a series of text-books, which have been quite popular, and has contributed much to the journals of his denomination.

WILLIAM F. YOUNG, after spending most of his minority in town, went to Lowell, Mass., where he became editor of the Workingman's Advocate, and has for several years indulged his pen freely in literature and criticisms.

GOV. RALPH METCALF made frequent contributions to the press, both in prose and poetry. On one occasion he wrote a "Prize Poem." A vein of good humor ran through most of his productions.

GEORGE E. BELKNAP wrote several letters for the press from Hong Kong, China, while on duty in the East Indies, relating to events which led to the capture of the Barrier forts by the U. S. squadron, and also pertaining to a cruise to Siam, giving a description of its capital, the king's palace, a visit to the king,—with whom he dined and breakfasted,—the meek appearance of the king's favorite wife, the religion of the country, and other matters. He also wrote poetry.

EDMUND BURKE. In addition to the large amount of editorial matter which he contributed to the columns of the Argus, Old Guard, and Washington Union, while they were under his management, he was the author of several reports while Commissioner of Patents, and of others while a member of congress. He is the author of "Bundlecund," and several other pamphlets which have had a national circulation. He wields a vigorous pen, and is surrounded by one of the most extensive private libraries in the state. That he has poetical talent is indicated by the following :

IN IMITATION OF BURNS.

Oh ! if my love were yon bright flower,
With perfumes rising on the air,
And I myself a tiny bee,
To nestle in its petals fair,—
Ah ! there, in rapt'rous joys I'd live,
And revel in her nectar'd charms,
And there a sweeter bliss I'd take
Than Cupid's self in Psyche's arms.

Oh ! were my love yon fleecy cloud,
That, graceful, floats in yonder sky,
And I myself a sunbeam bright,
To warm and glow as she flits by,— Ah ! there, from dewy morn till e'en,
I'd wanton in each mazy fold,
And take my fill of sweet delight,
And bathe her form in liquid gold.

Oh ! were my love yon crystal stream
That ripples o'er its pebbly bed,
And I a flower upon its brink,
To bow and lave my weary head,—
Ah ! there, the livelong day and night,
I'd kiss and quaff her sparkling wave,
And on her bosom soft I'd sigh
To drown me in so sweet a grave.

The first part of the chapter discusses the importance of the study of the history of the United States. It is a subject of great interest and importance to all Americans. The study of our history helps us to understand our present and to plan for our future. It is a subject that should be taught in all our schools. FRANCES A. BURKE, daughter of Hon. Edmund Burke, now wife of Col. George H. Dana, early in life wrote several songs and poems, which were published.

ALICE AUGUSTA DODGE, daughter of Rev. O. A. and Alice Cheney Dodge, and grand-daughter of Col. Wm. Cheney, born Dec. 13, 1835, was a graduate at Bradford Female Seminary, and wielded a ready pen. Among her more important productions were six volumes of Sabbath-school books, her taste and early training admirably fitting her for the work. She also made contributions to the press. Her books were published by the American Tract Society, and were highly commended by the press and public teachers.

HENRY E. BALDWIN, who was for a time editor of the Argus and Spectator, and subsequently of the Lowell Courier, wielded a ready pen, and was an agreeable writer. He sometimes indulged in poetry. His "Pencillings by the Way," written during a trip to the West, were in the best of humor, and were republished in several journals.

SAMUEL C. BALDWIN, besides being a man of sound judgment and an able editor, wrote several fine poems, which were published, and copied into the leading magazines of the country.

ELIZABETH FARNSWORTH, the youngest daughter of Dea. Joseph Farnsworth, and first wife of Jesse Wilcox, Jr., had a taste for literature, and enjoyed the advantages of early culture. She had a flashing, ready wit, and conversational powers equalled by few, which enabled her to be the star of the circles in which she moved. She wielded a ready pen, and wrote poetry with the greatest ease. From an aversion to appearing as an author, few of her poems were ever published.

ALONZO JAMES FOGG, son of Jeremiah Fogg, Esq., is the author of a work of about seven hundred pages, entitled "Statistical Gazeteer of New Hampshire," published in 1874, which is a work of acknowledged merit. During nearly all the active portion of his life he has been a contributor to various newspapers in different parts of the country, and has lectured before the New Hampshire Antiquarian Society, the New Hampshire Historical Society, and the Concord City Board of Trade. He was also a contributor to "Johnson's Universal Encyclopedia."

JACOB PERKINS, after serving out his apprenticeship in the Argus office, went to Concord, where he edited and published the Olive Branch.

Rev. G. R. W. SCOTT, while in town, wrote and compiled the Newport Advertiser, composed several hymns for special occasions, and made contributions to the press.

AUSTIN CORBIN, JR., published in May, 1847, a tale entitled "The Eagle; or, The Rover of the Mediterranean." Subsequently, while residing at the West, he had an interest in the Davenport Democrat, and contributed to its columns.

Dr. Willard P. Gibson, a native of Croydon, who practised medicine in this town for several years, and who died at Woodstock, Vt., in 1837, had a family, most of whom were born here, and nearly all of whom were inclined to literature. HANNAH, the eldest, was an excellent scholar, and a genius. She wrote both prose and poetry with ease and elegance. SARAH, now Mrs. THOMPSON, wrote very sweet and charming poems, both before and after her marriage. ELIZABETH, now Mrs. DUBOIS EVANS, also wrote fine verses. MARY, now Mrs. FRANCIS, the youngest daughter, has travelled much, both in this country and in Europe, during which time her thoughts and observations have been constantly given to the press, under the names of "Winnie Woodfern," "Mary Stanley Gibson," and "Margaret Blount." She has always, from a child, been a liberal contributor to the magazines and newspapers. The vigor and sprightliness of her pen early brought to her aid influential friends, and a competence. She writes both poetry and prose with the greatest ease and rapidity. The following poem is from her pen:

TOO LATE.

If this love, that is gilding life's summer,
Had been mine in life's spring,
How my soul would have met the new comer
With garment and ring,—
With sacrifice offered in gladness,
With hope for the beautiful years!
Alas! from the depths of my sadness,
I greet it with tears.

Too late do we stand at the altar !
Too late you rejoice !
Too late do you tremble and falter
At the sound of my voice !
The hand that you hold has grown thinner ;
The heart has known anguish and fears :
I am yours, O victorious winner !
I salute you with tears !

You say that love's golden September
Is faithful and strong :
You marvel that I should remember
Love's May-time of wrong.
The sorrow, for you, is all over ;
My heart is prophetic in fears,—
And so, for your kiss as my lover,
I offer my tears.

What! give to the cheek, in its whiteness,
Praise lost to its bloom?
What! turn from the eyes in their brightness,
And worship their gloom?
The rose, in its freshness and beauty,
You crushed, in your earlier years,—
Will you cherish it, faded, from duty?
I answer with tears.

EDWIN M. HALE, M. D., a son of Dr. Syene Hale, was born Feb. 2, 1839, and at the age of seven years removed, with his father, to Fredonia, Ohio. At the age of eighteen he engaged in the printing business, and during the time was a frequent contributor to the literary press. Being so much pleased with the prompt action of homœopathic remedies, administered to him in a severe illness, he was induced to turn his attention to medicine. He graduated at the Homœopathic Medical College, at Cleveland, Ohio, and after a successful practice became a professor in the Hahnemann Medical College of Chicago. He became an associate editor of the North American Journal of Homœopathy and of the American Homœopathic Observer. He first became known to the world as an author in 1860,—since which time he has published some fourteen volumes, mostly relating to his school of practice. His most elaborate production, a work of some one thousand pages, entitled "New Remedies," has enjoyed a wide popularity, has run through three editions, and has been translated into the German, French, and Spanish languages.

JAMES HALE, a brother of David and Syene Hale, whose residence was on the Unity road, published, in 1829, a volume entitled "Elements of Geometry and Trigonometry, with an easy and concise System of Land-Surveying."

REV. CHARLES PEABODY, of Chicago, Ills., son of Ammi, wrote a series of racy and readable articles for the Argus, in 1844, signed "Rusticandus," and in 1858 contributed a number of interesting communications to the St. Louis Democrat, from Europe, Egypt, and Palestine, where he spent most of the year in travel, giving an account of his adventures. He is author of a volume, published by the American Tract Society, New York, entitled "Twenty Years among the Colporteurs"

JOSEPH W. PARMELEE has a fondness for literature, and enjoys a constant intercourse with the best authors. He writes prose, as will be seen in other parts of this volume. He also indulges in poetry.

THOMAS A. GILMORE, a son of T. W. Gilmore, Esq., as "Tallimed," wrote many fine articles for the press. He was for several years a regular correspondent of the Boston Advertiser. "A Memorial of Mrs. Frederick W. Leonard," a sister, published by him in 1875, was a beautiful tribute.

AMOS B. LITTLE, while in the patent office at Washington, was a frequent correspondent of the New Hampshire Patriot and the Argus, and wielded a vigorous pen.

S. H. N. B. EVERETT, son of Richard Everett, wrote several tales and brief romances, which were first published in Gleason's Magazine, and were copied extensively into the newspapers of the day. He was editor of The Iris and Literary Repository, at Concord, in 1842, and afterwards of the Literary Souvenir, at Manchester.

MRS. R. H. E. KENERSON, daughter of Richard Everett, had a literary taste, and made frequent contributions to the press. A number of her poems, written and published during her nine years' residence at the West, commencing in 1856, were filled with sweet memories of her far-off New England home.

She is the author of the following :

MOONBEAMS.

Part the curtains from the lattice,
Open wide the cabin door;
Let the silvery moonbeams enter,
Let them flood the cabin floor.

For I know that they are shining,
As of old they used to shine,
On that mountain-buried hamlet,
On that dear old home of mine.

Let them fall upon my tresses.
Let them fall upon my brow;
I am thinking, I am thinking
Of another time than now.

Nay, now, do not light the taper;
Do not break the spell too soon;
For, believe me, there would never,
In the glaring light of noon,

Such a host of tender mem'ries
Throng around my heart and brain,
Of the happy days departed,
That will never come again.

Half a score of years are falling
From this world-worn heart of mine,
As I sit and weave these visions
Where the pearly moonbeams shine :

And my footsteps seem to wander
Mid the haunts of other days,
Where a phantom throng is gathered;
And before my eager gaze

Rise the "old familiar" faces
Of the cherished ones and dear;
And I meet the olden glances,
And the olden voices hear.

Eng. by Geo. E. Parson White

Edmund Wheeler

Let the silent footsteps enter,
Let the haunting faces come ;
Let the cadence of their voices
Linger round my lowly home :

For my rude and simple cabin
Like a thing of beauty seems,— Like Aladdin's fairy palace,
Fraught with my fantastic dreams.

EDMUND WHEELER, the author of this history, published "Croydon and its Centennial" in 1867 ; was a contributor to the Granite State Journal and Aurora of the Valley, published at Windsor, Vt., in 1870 and 1871, and the Boston Advertiser in 1872. In 1878 a large number of the citizens of Croydon, his native place, entered his residence, and with speeches and other appropriate ceremonies, presented him with a beautiful gold cane, as a token of respect, and in recognition of his services as historian of the town.

JACOB W. WHEELER, a son of Simeon, was a ready writer. Some of his desultory verses evinced a talent for poetry ; and a series of communications, written at different points of the Union during a "jour" tour, and published in the Argus over the signature of "Bourgeois," were composed with ability. He was for a time editor of the Democratic Banner, at Davenport, Iowa, but in consequence of ill-health returned to his native town, where he died in July, 1853, aged twenty-five years.

MATTHEW HARVEY, besides his many years of editorial service, has been the author of many apt and beautiful poems and songs, all written by request and for special occasions. Among them might be named "The Memory of Washington," written for the Connecticut River Masonic Union, and recited by the author, Feb. 19, 1875 ; "The Hearth-Stone," a song ; "Dedication Ode"—masonic ; "Centennial Ode," written for the celebration of the one hundredth birthday of John McCrillis ; "Song of Welcome," written for the reunion of the 14th N. H. Regiment ; and "My Waterfall."

GEORGE E. JENKS, son of Oliver Jenks, established and edited the "New Hampshire Political Manual," which was published from 1857 to 1872 inclusive.

The history of the city of New York from 1624 to 1898 is a story of growth and development. It begins with the first Dutch settlement in 1624, when a group of men led by William Kieft established a trading post on the island of Manhattan. Over the years, the settlement grew into a city, and the Dutch became the dominant power in the region. In 1674, the British took control of the city, and it became part of the Province of New York. The city continued to grow, and by the 18th century, it was one of the largest and most important cities in the colonies. In 1789, the city became the seat of the new federal government, and it played a key role in the early years of the United States. The city's growth continued through the 19th century, as it became a major center of commerce and industry. By 1898, the city had grown into a metropolis, and it was one of the most important cities in the world.

EDWARD A. JENKS, also son of Oliver Jenks, is the author of a number of beautiful poems, contributed to some of the leading magazines of the country. Among them are "Helene," "The Return," "The Life Stream," "The Old Man's Yesterday," "The Old Farm-House," "The Discovery," "Going and Coming," "The Reaper," "Blue Eyes," "The Biggest Boy," "June Fancies," "Under the Trees," and "My Favorite Stream." The following poems, selected almost at random, fairly illustrate his poetic ability:

THE RETURN.

"Three years! I wonder if she'll know me;—

I limp a little, and I left one arm

At Petersburg; and I am grown as brown

As the plump chestnuts on my little farm:

And I am shaggy as the chestnut-burrs,

But ripe and sweet within, and wholly hers.

"The darling, how I long to see her!

My heart outruns this feeble soldier-pace,—

For I remember, after I had left,

A little Charlie came to take my place:

Ah! how the laughing three-year-old brown eyes—

His mother's eyes—will stare with pleased surprise!

"Sure they'll be at the corner watching;

I sent them word that I should come to-night:

The birds all know it, for they crowd around,

Twittering their welcome with a wild delight:

And that old robin with a halting wing,—

I saved her life three years ago last spring.

"Three years! Perhaps I am but dreaming,—

For, like the Pilgrim of the long ago,

I've tugged a weary burden at my back

Through summer's heat and winter's blinding snow,

Till now I reach my home, my darling's breast,

Where I can roll my burden off, and rest."

* * * * *

When morning came, the early rising sun

Laid his light fingers on a soldier sleeping

Where a soft covering of bright green grass

Over two lowly mounds was lightly creeping,

But waked him not: his was the rest eternal,

THE LIFE-STREAM.

One April morning, when the Spring
Released the mountain rill,
I heard the baffled Winter wind
Retreat along the hill.

The father-sun came bending o'er,
And tenderly caressed
The laughing prattler, as he drew
His mountain-mother's breast.
The rill, when tired of revelling
Among the fountains full,
Ran sparkling down the velvet slope,
To sleep—a shady pool.

But when, as morning dawned again,
He peeped the margin o'er,
And saw the beckoning buttercups
Fast marching on before,—
He could not stay; he turned and kissed
His sleeping mother—then Stole softly 'neath the lintel green,
And rippled down the glen.

As childhood, in uneasy dreams,
Flies through the green aisles dim
Of some old crooning forest where Lurk monsters fierce and grim,—
So fled he, as the stealthy roots
Of gnarled and wrinkled trees
Came twisting out the loamy bank
His truant foot to seize.

In most fantastic windings lost,
In meadows dewy sweet,
To catch the jocund birds that flung
Their music at his feet,—
He wandered dreamily along
Till day began to wane,
And sighed, "Ah, me! I ne'er shall see My mountain home again."

He hurried down a rocky steep,
'A wild and reckless stream,
And lay all quivering at its foot,
At rest—perchance to dream

Of that long way he needs must wend,
The victories to be won,
The blessings waiting at the end
When all his work was done.

Day after day he travelled on,— Grew broad, and deep, and strong,—
And turned the ponderous wheels of life
To rhythmic flow of song:
And while in all the strife of years
He aimed to bear a part,
A white swan lay upon his breast,
Her image in his heart.

One golden autumn afternoon,
The traveller neared the goal
With hurried step and lab'ring breath;—
He heard the thunder roll,
But pressed right onward to the brink,
Nor shunned the dread abyss,—
His hopes all fixed on realms above,
One last fond look on this.

Oh! transformation wonderful!
Above that gulf, at even,
Hovered a misty form of grace,
Robed in the hues of heaven!

ALLAN M. JENKS, son of Edward A. Jenks, born April 17, 858, is local editor of the Concord Daily Monitor.

BARON S. CROWELL, son of Samuel, though most of his life an invalid, was nevertheless an apt scholar, and had a vigorous intellect. He made frequent contributions to the public journals, both of prose and poetry, which were favorably received. At his request, the article calling for the writing of the history of the town was, in 1870, inserted in the warrant calling the annual meeting.

GEORGE S. BARTON, while here in the practice of law, indulged his pen freely, both in prose and poetry; the latter, however, was his favorite diversion.

AMASA EDES has published several addresses upon agriculture, temperance, and other subjects, and has been a constant contributor to the press.

SHEPHERD L. BOWERS has for several years been the regular correspondent of the Boston Journal, and has otherwise contributed to public journals.

MARY DWINEL CHELLIS, now MRS. S. FRANK LUND, a native of Goshen, and daughter of Seth Chellis, Esq., has written, during her residence of eleven years in this town, some twenty-six volumes. Several of them were prize works, when she had numerous competitors, and in the writing of which she won valuable prizes. Her productions have been published in Boston and New York, and have had a wide circulation. She has also written poetry and dramas, and other matter for the periodical press. A writer in a public journal says,—

Her books are in public libraries, and in Sabbath-school libraries of all denominations, and are marked by fine imagery, keen sarcasm, and moral sentiment, and they all bear the impress of the author's finished scholarship. She is an able writer, and a ceaseless toiler in the prolific field of literature she has chosen. She makes literature her profession; and proof-sheets are constantly passing between her city publishers and herself.

The following are the titles of some of her more popular works: "Charley Wheeler's Reward," "Old Sunapee," "Deacon Sims's Prayers" (took the prize among fifty competitors), "Molly's Bible," "Effie Wingate's Work," "Father Merrill" (prize book), "The Mystery of the Lodge," "Good Work," "Jimmy's Shoes," "Only a Plain Woman," a series of six books, entitled "Glimpses of Nature," "The Temperance Doctor," "Out of the Fire," "Aunt Dinah's Pledge," "Old Times," "At Lion's Mouth," "Wealth and Wine," "All for Money," "Ten Cents," "The Brewer's Fortune," "Bill Drock's Investments," "The Old Doctor's Son," "Mark Dunning's Enemy," "The Hermit of Holcombe," etc. In addition to the above, Mrs. Lund's eleven years' work includes many popular stories, sketches, serials, and lectures.

ALBERT S. WAIT, although a lawyer, and mainly devoted to his profession, has nevertheless a decided fondness for books, delights in surrounding himself with the choicest works of science and literature, and has a beautiful cabinet of rare specimens illustrating the science of geology. He has written essays and lectures upon various subjects. His lectures on "American Antiquities," on "Spectrum Analysis," on "Greek Character," the latter delivered before the New Hampshire Antiquarian Society, and his Masonic "Reports on Foreign Correspondence," published in 1878, are among his most finished productions. To him the author of this history is indebted for valuable aid in the review of several chapters, and especially for the one on Free Masonry, the composition of which is wholly his.

NATHAN E. REED wields a ready pen, and has been a popular correspondent of the National Eagle and other papers, and has written lectures.

LOVELL WHITE, son of Nathan, wrote "El Rio Colorado del Sur," a graphic description of the Colorado river of the South and its surroundings, as well as the Gulf of California, into which it discharges; "Margaret Hemming," a story which had the honor of a republication in English magazines; and "The Judge's Story," which was published in the Overland magazine.

ISABEL WILCOX, daughter of Calvin Wilcox, and wife of Judson M. Ewing, of Kansas, has a poetic turn of mind, and was much given to rhyming during her school-days. She wrote the "Class Ode" at the time of her graduation at Kimball Union Academy, in the summer of 1866, which was published at the time.

ANNE PARMELEE, a daughter of Joseph W. Parmelee, inherits much of her father's fondness for books, and though still in her girlhood, has contributed several valuable poems to the press.

ELIZABETH BRETT, while living with her father, S. G. Brett, at Northville, contributed liberally to the press, and was the author of several beautiful poems which were published at the time. The railroad depot now occupies the once charming little nook which surrounded that "Riverside Cottage" made classic by her pen.

FRANK H. CARLETON, son of Henry G. Carleton, born Oct. 8, 1849, early in life indicated a taste for literature. In 1872, the year in which he graduated at Dartmouth college, he won the "Grimes prize" for the best English composition, and wrote the "Parting Ode" for class day. He has been the author of several poems, and as "Deciplus" has been a liberal contributor to various public journals since his early boyhood. He wrote several interesting communications for the press, while teaching at the South in the winter of 1871. At the close of his college course he became one of the editors of the Union Democrat, at Manchester. He went to St. Paul, Minnesota, where he was for a season connected with journalism, and was clerk of a court of record. He ultimately studied law in the office of Gov. Pillsbury, and is now in the practice of his profession in his adopted city.

VIRGIL C. STEVENS, a native of Goshen, but who was for some time a resident here, went from this town to California, where he became editor of the California Whig.

BELA W. JENKS, son of Bela W., published a paper in California.

MISS B. AILEEN YOUNG, a native of Lisbon, N. H., came to this town with her mother's family, and remained here until the time of her death, which occurred in 1871, at the age of twenty-two years. The year previous to her death she published a volume of 240 pages, entitled "Twice an Orphan, and other Sketches," written and compiled by herself.

LIBRARIES.

THE charter for the NEWPORT SOCIAL LIBRARY was granted to Jesse Lane, Jesse Willard, and Samuel Church, and their associates, June 9, 1803. The by-laws, proposed by Rev. Abijah Wines, Hubbard Newton, and Arnold Ellis, were adopted in 1812. For many years it furnished the main reading for the town. Its volumes, especially its more recent publications, were eagerly sought for, and read with the greatest interest, and exerted a beneficent effect upon the intellects and morals of the town. In 1853, the old, and what were deemed the less valuable books, were sold to the antiquarian bookstores, and the proceeds reinvested in new works. It now has some four hundred volumes. As no appropriate room has ever been furnished for its keeping, it has had various homes. It has been kept at the residence of Samuel Church, at the James Breck store, at the Wheeler saddlery, and at the offices of S. L. Bowers, L. W. Barton, and S. H. Edes, the present librarian.

The SOCIAL LIBRARY, at Northville, was established about the same time. It had, for the times, a large collection of valuable books, which were much read by the people in that portion of the town. It was kept at first, and for many years, by Dea. Elias Metcalf, afterwards by Maj. Josiah Wakefield and by James Haven. It was finally divided among the shareholders.

There are libraries, containing many valuable works, connected with the Sabbath-schools of our churches. The catalogue at the Congregationalist has a list of nearly 1,000 volumes; the Baptist, 600; Universalist, a choice selection; and Methodist, 1,000 volumes. The Methodists have, also, a library at the parsonage, for the use of their clergyman. The Ladies' Charitable Society, connected with the Congregational church, has a library.

The Hon. Edmund Burke has a private library of over 6,000 volumes; besides which there are several other private libraries of some 1,000 volumes each.

John C. Kelley, in 1871, transformed his bookstore, containing all the latest and most valuable works, into a circulating library, thus affording our citizens an opportunity to read all the more recent works without the necessity of purchasing. This library is still continued by Eleazer C. Converse.

NEWPORT LYCEUM. Newport has been blest with a good share of forensic talent, and hence lyceums, when undertaken, have usually been well sustained. The legal fraternity, among whom have always been able debaters, has always given it a hearty support. During three periods in the history of the town, the proceedings have been invested with more than ordinary interest. One, commencing about 1830 and continuing for several years, was supported by the old lawyers,—Amasa Edes, Hubbard Newton, Josiah Forsaith, and B. B. French,—and by Josiah Stevens, Simon Brown, and the then youthful Charles Peabody and William P. Wheeler. Another, about twenty years later, was sustained by Q. A. Gilmore, S. M. Wheeler, L. W. Barton, George Dustin, George T. Angel, J. W. Parmelee, W. M. Guilford, Benjamin F. Sawyer, and E. Wheeler. A desire among its members to be the star speaker led to thorough preparation, and invested it with interest. The most successful term was held some three years prior to 1870, in which the finest music, and a paper ably conducted by the ladies, were made to lend an extra attraction to the exercises. W. H. H. Allen, P. S. Adams, S. L. Bowers, L. W. Barton, I. A. Reed, A. S. Wait, H. H. Metcalf, and Marquis Collister were among the more active debaters. At the last annual meeting, held March 28, 1873, S. L. Bowers was elected president; E. Wheeler, vice-president; O. P. Baston, clerk; and Granville Pollard, treasurer.

NEWPORT READING CIRCLE. This circle was formed in 1833, and was composed of the young ladies and gentlemen of the village, who associated together for the two-fold purpose of social enjoyment, and mutual improvement in literature. They met once a week, and listened to original and select readings.

PERIODICAL CLUB. This club was organized Jan. 6, 1844, and took nearly all the leading magazines in this country and Great Britain. By the by-laws, the members were required to meet once a week and exchange books. At the end of the year the files of the different works were collected together and sold to the highest bidder, and the proceeds invested in new books. This club, for a time, enjoyed quite a popularity. Another similar club was formed some twenty years later, and was well patronized.

A LECTURE ASSOCIATION was formed in 1859, and employed several very interesting speakers.

CHAPTER XXI.

FREE MASONRY.

BY A. S. WAIT, ESQ.

A HISTORY of Newport would be incomplete without some reference to an institution so much connected with the social interests of the town as has been that of Free Masonry.

On the 12th of June, 1816, a Dispensation was granted by William H. Woodward, then Grand Master of Masons of New Hampshire, to Arnold Ellis, Hubbard Newton, Samuel Rogers, Luther Delano, John Quimby, Prince Crosby, James D. Walcott, Samuel Marsh, Jr., Sylvanus Richards, Joshua Currier, and Nathaniel Woodward, to form and open a Lodge, at Newport, by the name of Corinthian Lodge, No. 28; and naming Arnold Ellis as Master, Hubbard Newton as Senior Warden, and Samuel Rogers as Junior Warden. The first meeting, as shown by the records, was held in "Richards hall" on the 21st of June of the same year, when the other officers were chosen, and the Lodge was duly organized. "The first regular communication of the Lodge" was "holden at Col. Luther Delano's hall, on Tuesday, the 2d day of July, A. L. 5816," and, as the records show, "the Lodge was opened on the first degree of Masonry." At that meeting Nathaniel Wheeler, Jr., was proposed for admission to the first degree, and at the next meeting, on the 6th of August, he was duly initiated. The second person receiving this honor was William Cheney, who, having presented his application on the 6th of August, was admitted to initiation on the third of the following September.

A charter having been obtained from the Grand Lodge of the state, on the 12th of November the Lodge was duly constituted and its officers installed,—the first three being the same as mentioned in the Dispensation.

Nathaniel Wheeler, Jr., and William Cheney received the degree of Master Mason, on the 1st of April, 1817, and very soon Asa McGregor, Amos Little, Erastus Baldwin, David Hale, and many other prominent citizens of the town, as well as of several adjoining towns, were admitted to the same honor.

The first known practical step towards a temperance reform in Newport appears to have been taken by Free Masons, in their associated character as such; for on the first day of September, 1818, at a regular meeting, as the records show, Corinthian Lodge

"Voted, That no ardent spirits shall hereafter be introduced into our Lodge during Lodge hours."

When it is recollected that, even at a much later period than this, the use of intoxicating liquors was so common as to be regarded as a necessity; that it was an article of ordinary merchandise, sold in all stores, and dealt out openly at bars in all hotels; that it was deemed an essential part of refreshment at all social gatherings, by all classes, clergy as well as laity, and equally by both sexes,—the significance of this vote cannot fail to be apparent. The writer well remembers a venerable Baptist clergyman, a near neighbor of his father, in an adjacent state, though not very distant from Newport, sending on Sunday, after his clerical duties were over, for the loan of spirit with which to refresh himself after the fatigues of the day, his own supply having become exhausted. It is but just to say, however, that this clergyman became afterwards one of the first movers in the temperance cause, and labored earnestly for its success. To the Masonic institution in Newport must therefore be conceded the credit of having initiated the temperance movement in the town.

In September, 1822, the Lodge met with what was justly deemed an irreparable loss, in the death of David Hale, its Worshipful Master, an account of which is given in another part of this history. Brother Hale was elected Master of Corinthian Lodge in April, 1821, and was reelected in April, 1822. On the occasion of his obsequies, a sermon was preached to a large concourse of people, by the Rev. Jonathan Nye, of Claremont, then District Deputy Grand Master, an eminent clergy

The first of these is the fact that the Earth is not a uniform sphere. It is an oblate spheroid, with the equatorial diameter being about 43 km greater than the polar diameter. This is due to the centrifugal force of rotation, which causes the material at the equator to be pushed outwards. The second fact is that the Earth's surface is not smooth. It is covered in mountains, valleys, and oceans. The third fact is that the Earth's interior is not uniform. It has a solid inner core, a liquid outer core, and a mantle. The fourth fact is that the Earth's atmosphere is not uniform. It has different layers, each with different properties. The fifth fact is that the Earth's magnetic field is not uniform. It has a complex structure, with magnetic poles that are not aligned with the geographic poles. The sixth fact is that the Earth's climate is not uniform. It has different climates in different parts of the world. The seventh fact is that the Earth's life is not uniform. It has different types of life in different parts of the world. The eighth fact is that the Earth's history is not uniform. It has different events in different parts of its history. The ninth fact is that the Earth's future is not uniform. It has different possibilities for its future. The tenth fact is that the Earth is not a simple system. It is a complex system, with many different parts and processes. The eleventh fact is that the Earth is not a static system. It is a dynamic system, with things constantly changing. The twelfth fact is that the Earth is not a closed system. It is an open system, with energy and matter constantly entering and leaving. The thirteenth fact is that the Earth is not a perfect system. It has many imperfections and flaws. The fourteenth fact is that the Earth is not a predictable system. It is a chaotic system, with many things that are difficult to predict. The fifteenth fact is that the Earth is not a simple system. It is a complex system, with many different parts and processes. The sixteenth fact is that the Earth is not a static system. It is a dynamic system, with things constantly changing. The seventeenth fact is that the Earth is not a closed system. It is an open system, with energy and matter constantly entering and leaving. The eighteenth fact is that the Earth is not a perfect system. It has many imperfections and flaws. The nineteenth fact is that the Earth is not a predictable system. It is a chaotic system, with many things that are difficult to predict. The twentieth fact is that the Earth is not a simple system. It is a complex system, with many different parts and processes.

men, and a distinguished Mason. The remains, borne to the grave by his brethren, including many members of distant Lodges, were deposited with the solemn rites of the order; and his office appropriately remained vacant until the annual election, in April of the following year, when William Cheney was duly chosen and installed as his successor.

The membership of the Lodge continued to increase by the accession of worthy and useful citizens of Newport and adjacent towns, until what is known as the "Morgan abduction," which occurred in the western part of the state of New York, in September of the year 1826. Any discussion of this occurrence, or of its consequences to the Masonic order, would be out of place in a history of the town of Newport. We may, however, be allowed to suggest, that to the philosophical student of history, its careful study cannot fail to present one of the most interesting of the episodes of human progress. He will there see the people of a territory, greater in extent than that of Great Britain and Ireland, so deeply moved as to unsettle all the social relations of society; he will see political parties swept from existence, and re-formed upon new bases; he will see brother literally arrayed against brother, parent against child and child against parent, husband against wife and wife against husband; he will see churches riven to their very foundations, and Christian charity nearly extinguished in a Christian land,—and from a cause which, in the light of former experience, would have been expected to form no more than a subject of mere local inquiry. Thanks to a better civilization, that the melancholy events of the Popish Plot of English history were not reenacted upon American soil, and that returning reason has to regret no sacrifice of human life in a cause as unreal as a phantom.

On the 4th of March, 1828, the degree of Master Mason was conferred upon Harrison G. Smart, which was the last accession to the order in Corinthian Lodge.

At the meeting on Dec. 1, 1829, there was received "a communication from Hiram Lodge, respecting celebrating the approaching 27th of December;" and it was "Voted, that the Secretary return an answer, that, considering the excitement against Masonry, it is thought inexpedient to join the celebration."

The Lodge continued to hold its meetings regularly each month, until May 7, 1833, when it was opened and closed upon the Entered Apprentice's degree, after which no records appear, and the charter was soon surrendered.

The following are the names of those brethren who held the office of Worshipful Master of Corinthian Lodge, from its constitution to the surrender of its charter: Arnold Ellis, 1816-17; John Quimby, 1817-19; Horace Chase, 1819-21; David Hale, 1821-22; William Cheney, 1823-24; Sylvester Partridge, 1826-27; Harvey Huntoon, 1827-29; John Silver, 1829-31; Benjamin B. French, 1832-33.

MOUNT VERNON LODGE. Mount Vernon Lodge, No. 15, previously located in the town of Washington, was, by authority of the Grand Lodge, removed, in 1848, to Newport. Its first meeting here was held on the 10th day of July of that year, Brother Jonas Parker being Worshipful Master, Lewis Underwood Senior Warden, and John Gunnison Junior Warden, all residing in the town of Goshen, and Daniel M. Smith, of Lempster, Secretary. At this communication, Brother Harvey Huntoon, of Unity, acted as Senior Deacon; Naylor Starbird, of Newport, as Junior Deacon; Oliver Lund, of Newport, as Treasurer; and John Carr, also of Newport, as Tyler; and Brothers John Silver, Harvey Huntoon, Naylor Starbird, Amos Little, Seth Richards, and Oliver Lund, all formerly members of Corinthian Lodge, were, on a vote by ballot, admitted members of Mount Vernon Lodge, as was also, at the next regular meeting, Brother Mason Hatch, likewise a former member of Corinthian Lodge; and the records state that "Remarks were made by Brothers Chase, Silver, Huntoon, Lund, and others, interesting and highly encouraging to the cause of Masonry." From this period the Lodge has experienced uniform prosperity, and its influence has continued to widen.

From the time of its removal from Washington the meetings of the Lodge were held in the building known as the Matson block, where a hall was fitted up for its use, until the year 1872, when it became necessary to provide more ample accommodations for its largely increased numbers. Accordingly a contract was entered into with Dexter Richards, a member of the Lodge, for the construction of a suitable hall and other apartments for the use of the Lodge, in a building early erected as a dwelling-house by William Cheney, being the same which was afterwards for many years the residence of Dr. Thomas Sanborn, and which, having been purchased by Mr. Richards, was then about to undergo those transformations since the completion of which the building has been known as the Cheney block. Here an elegant hall with adjoining apartments, and ample for the accommodation of the Lodge, was, on the 13th day of November, 1872, by the Grand Lodge of the state, publicly dedicated to the patron saints of the order.

From this time the Lodge has steadily increased in numbers, until at the present time (1878) its rolls show a membership of 192.

The names of those who have been Worshipful Masters of the Lodge, since its removal to Newport, are,—Jonas Parker, 1848-49; Levi Underwood, 1849-50; Virgil Chase, 1850-51; John Puffer, 1851-52; Thomas Sanborn, 1852-53; James Karr, 1853-54; Benjamin M. Gilmore, 1854-55; D. W. Watkins, 1855-56; Charles H. Little, 1856-57; Charles Emerson, 1857-58; William E. Moore, 1858-60; Thomas Sanborn, 1860-61; Jonas Parker, 1861-62; John Young, Jr., 1862-65; Matthew Harvey, 1865-67; Albert S. Wait, 1867-69; David McLaughlin, 1869-71; Josiah Turner, 1871-73; Henry M. Ingram, 1873-75; Arthur H. Ingram, 1875-76; John Young, 1876.

Its present officers are,—Worshipful Master, Frank A. Rawson; Senior Warden, William H. McCrillis; Junior Warden, Frank J. Latimer; Treasurer, Frank P. Meserve; Secretary, Charles H. Little; Senior Deacon, Charles H. Kelsey; Junior Deacon, Elisha P. Fisher; Stewards, Lorenzo Whitemore, Fred W. Richards; Tyler, Edward E. Stearns; Marshal, S. Frank Lund; Chaplain, A. V. Hitchcock.

CHAPTER OF THE TABERNACLE. Until the year 1872, Free Masonry in Newport was principally confined to the lodge. On the 19th day of June of that year, a Dispensation was granted, by Edward Gustine, of Keene, Grand High Priest of the state, to Albert S. Wait, of Newport, John Young, of Sunapee, Albina H. Powers, of Croydon, and nine other Royal Arch Masons, all members of Webb Chapter at Claremont, to open a Royal Arch Chapter at Newport, by the name of the "Chapter of the Tabernacle," in which the three Companions named were designated, respectively, High Priest, King, and Scribe. The first Convocation under this Dispensation was held on the 15th of July; and there were at that time presented the applications of ten brother Master Masons for the degrees in the new Chapter, and they all in due course received the several degrees from Mark Master to Royal Arch Mason. At the Convocation of the Grand Chapter of the state, in May, 1873, a charter was granted to this Chapter; and on the 19th of the following February it was duly constituted and its officers installed. The number of members now upon the rolls of the Chapter of the Tabernacle is thirty-five. The office of High Priest was held by A. S. Wait until the annual Convocation on the 7th of April, 1876, when he was succeeded by Ashton W. Rounsevel, Nathan S. Johnson being at the same time chosen King, and George E. Dame, Scribe. The present officers of the Chapter (1878) are,—George C. Edes, High Priest; D. George Chadwick, King; Henry M. Ingram, Scribe; Perley S. Coffin, Treasurer; Charles H. Little, Secretary; Arthur H. Ingram, Captain of the Host; Alonzo D. Howard, Principal Sojourner; Oliver Call, Royal Arch Captain; Morris J. Emons, Abiathar Richards, Ariel A. Huntoon, Masters of the Veils; George W. Tilton, Charles L. Brockway, Stewards; Edwin M. Hunton, Tyler.

ODD-FELLOWS. The Sugar River Lodge, No. 55, I. O. O. F., was instituted May 25, 1874. The charter members were Marshall E. Hatch, George A. Ellis, and Cyrus A. Thompson. They have a new and elegant hall, in Richards block, fitted up for their accommodation. The lodge has had a brief but successful career, and in 1877 had a membership of seventy-two, and no deaths had occurred in their ranks.

At the regular communication, Monday evening, July 3, 1876, the following officers were installed for the ensuing term: Cyrus A. Thompson, N. G.; Charles H. Matthews, V. G.; Charles M. Cummings, Rec. Sec.; Philip Royce, Treas.; Silas Coffin, Per. Sec.; A. W. Clark, Warden; Frank P. Meserve, C.; Frank J. Latimer, R. S. N. G.; Henry C. Tenney, L. S. N. G.; M. E. Hatch, O. G.; Lyman E. Hunter, I. G.; Sanford H. Bascom, R. S. V. G.; Rodney Tilton, L. S. V. G.; R. M. J. Hastings, R. S. S.; Charles H. Young, L. S. S.; W. S. Kempton, Chaplain.

KNIGHTS OF HONOR. A lodge of this order was organized in Newport, May 2, 1876, by J. H. Wright, of Boston, Deputy Supreme Dictator, and is known as Mount Coit Lodge, K. of H. The officers duly elected and installed at the first meeting were,—E. P. Fisher, Past Dictator; George E. Dame, Dictator; E. C. Converse, Vice-Dictator; Dr. H. Tubbs, Assistant Dictator; Rev. A. S. Nickerson, Chaplain; A. W. Rounsevel, Guide; F. P. Meserve, Reporter; G. C. Edes, Financial Reporter; A. S. Chase, Treasurer; C. H. Watts, Guardian; S. S. Kimball, Sentinel; T. B. Sanborn, M. D., Surgeon; George E. Dame, T. B. Sanborn, E. C. Converse, Directors.

CHAPTER XXII.

EDUCATION.

SCHOOLS. The first record we find relating to schools is the following: "Nov. 23, 1772. Voted to build a house thirty by twenty feet, to be done the following July for public use, to be improved as a school-house, and for religious worship." The educational interests of the town, thus early provided for, have ever been regarded with watchful care.

"March 8, 1774. Voted that there shall be four pounds lawful money paid out of the town treasury towards the support of a school the ensuing summer, to be paid in grain at the market price."

"March 14, 1775. Voted to pay five pounds lawful money worth of grain to support a school; one half is to support a school in the summer, and the other half in the winter; wheat at 5s. per bushel, and rye at 3s. 9d. per bushel."

During the embarrassing times of the Revolution, no public funds were raised for the support of schools. They were then supported by voluntary contributions from those having scholars.

The Rev. Mr. Remele, after his settlement in 1783, was, in addition to his duties as pastor, a successful and popular teacher. The Rev. Mr. Wines is also remembered as an excellent instructor, especially for those in the more advanced studies. Jonah Griswold was for many years a favorite teacher at Northville. Benj. THE STATE

CHAPTER

The first part of the book is devoted to a general survey of the state of the country at the time of the Revolution. It is a very interesting and valuable work, and one which every student of the history of the United States should read. The author, who is a distinguished statesman and writer, has given us a very full and accurate account of the state of the country at the time of the Revolution. He has shown us how the country was divided into two parties, the Federalists and the Republicans, and how they fought a bitter and long struggle for the supremacy of the country. He has also shown us how the country was divided into two sections, the North and the South, and how they fought a bitter and long struggle for the supremacy of the country. The book is a very interesting and valuable work, and one which every student of the history of the United States should read.

Towne, M. Bradford Boardman, Orpha Fletcher, Ursula Kelley, and Augusta Jewett, are a few among those who have been prominent and successful teachers.

During the last century our school habits have in some respects greatly changed. In the earlier days women were employed to teach the summer schools, and men had almost the exclusive management of the winter schools. Now men are rarely found in our school-rooms summer or winter. There are several reasons which have led to this change. Teaching is almost the only profession open to women, and those seeking remunerative employment naturally press into it, while all professions are open to men. Again: it is found that women are better adapted by nature to take charge of the young; that they are more patient, and are more apt in teaching;—and another reason is, they are willing to work for less pay. It requires but little financial skill to show, that when the woman asks $10 per week and the man $20, you pay the woman only half as much money as you do the man for the same amount of labor, and secure, at the same time, on an average, a better quality of work. Some think that the presence of a man in our schools is necessary to their complete success; but in several important cities in the West, women only are employed as teachers, and with the most satisfactory results. This same tendency to employ women as teachers is manifest throughout the country. In Vermont and in New York city, ninety per cent. of all the teachers are women. Again: the free use of the rod, and the severer forms of corporal punishment which prevailed in the more Puritanical days, have given place to milder forms of discipline, which are more humane, and have proved quite as effectual.

DISTRICTS. The town was early divided into districts for purposes of schooling. District No. 1 embraced those on the Unity road, from the Fairbanks corner south; No. 2, the territory occupied by Main street; No. 3, the region about Kelleyville; No. 4, East Mountain; No. 5, East Newport; and No. 6, the Northville district.

In 1837, Oliver Jenks, Jeremiah D. Nettleton, and Josiah Stevens, Jr., were appointed a committee to divide the town into school districts, who reported the boundaries substantially as they remained until 1876, when the abandonment of our hill farms, and a change in the population, caused some of the districts to be almost without scholars. A re-districting became necessary, and a committee, consisting of Ephraim E. P. Abbott, P. S. Adams, Edmund Wheeler, I. A. Reed, S. H. Edes, and Charles A. Silsby, was appointed for that purpose; but no satisfactory plan of division has yet been matured.

THE UNION DISTRICT. In the spring of 1874 the four village districts voted, by a very large majority, to unite and form one district, for the purpose of grading the schools, and thus promoting their value and efficiency. A committee, consisting of E. Wheeler, J. L. Swett, and B. M. Gilmore, for District No. 2, Dexter Richards, S. H. Edes, L. W. Barton, and R. S. Howe, for No. 8, F. W. Lewis, S. L. Bowers, and P. S. Coffin, for No. 14, and R. Huntoon, H. Call, and Simon A. Tenney, for No. 18, was appointed to settle upon the terms of union. Their report was adopted by an almost unanimous vote. At the first meeting of the district, which was held May 13, 1874, Richard S. Howe, Edmund Wheeler, and George R. Brown were appointed a committee to procure the necessary rooms, supply the needed furniture, grade the scholars, adopt suitable rules, and put the schools in operation. The town, having the former town-hall and court-house building on hand, met, and voted to lease it to the Union district for school purposes for the term of ninety-nine years, provided they would fit it up and keep it in repair, and maintain in it, for a term of not less than twenty weeks in each year, a grammar school, without expense to the town, the inhabitants of other districts having the right to send their scholars to any grade in the school, by paying a reasonable tuition to assist towards defraying the running expenses of the school.

At the annual meeting, in the spring of 1876, the Union district voted to raise $600 in addition to the school-money required by law. This was done in order to secure the services of a permanent teacher, competent to manage the school and instruct in the more advanced studies, and also to extend the three terms in the higher grades to twelve weeks each. This, after two years' experience, was deemed the wiser policy. In 1877 the sum of $400, and in 1878, $600, was raised for a like purpose. By an equitable distribution of the public school-money, it is thought the Union district could maintain, for thirty-six weeks in each year, a school, the grade of which should be sufficiently advanced to meet the wants of the public, and fit those that wished, for college, without additional taxation. The benefits resulting from grading the schools have exceeded the expectations of its most sanguine advocates.

The amount of school-money in Union district in 1877 was $2,123.06.

A law constituting a Board of Education was passed in June, 1877, at the suggestion of the committee of this district, who thought an independent action of the district would result in benefit to all concerned. At the annual meeting, in 1878, the district adopted this law, and organized according to its provisions. They chose a board of education, consisting of Edmund Wheeler, Samuel H. Edes, George W. Britton, Thomas B. Sanborn, Albert S. Wait, and George E. Dame. This board organized by choosing Edmund Wheeler, president, George E. Dame, secretary and treasurer, and Samuel H. Edes, financial agent.

The bell on the centre school-house, which is of steel, and cost some $125, was the gift of Thomas W. Gilmore, Esq., who, in his brief presentation speech, said he gave it, partly to testify how fully he appreciated the grand system which we had adopted for our schools, and partly that he might place a portion of his money in a position where he could hear it ring while he lived.

Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, in the grammar room, was presented by George R. Brown and Miss Nettie L. Bartlett, the teachers.

Ephraim E. P. Abbott,	Josiah Forsaith,	Bela Nettleton,
Paul S. Adams,	Joseph Freeman,	Ira Person,
William H. H. Allen,	Foster Henry,	Joseph W. Parmelee,

In 1878, the board of education was elected; and Albert S. Wait and Edmund Wheeler were assigned to the duties of superintendents for the Union district.

Rev. Paul S. Adams, of this town, was Common School Commissioner for Sullivan county in 1860 and 1861, and Rev. C. M. Dinsmore held the same office in 1866.

The Sullivan County Teachers' Institute has held frequent sessions in this town since its establishment. These sessions have been well attended, useful to the teachers, and interesting to the public. Nearly every term has been attended by able and experienced instructors.

NEWPORT ACADEMY. The Newport academy was incorporated June 24, 1819. A number of the citizens of this and the neighboring towns, wishing to give their children a more advanced education than was to be had at our common schools, and in many instances to fit them for college, made a compact, whereby they were to hire a teacher, at a salary of $400,—a sum deemed ample to secure the desired talent,—and pledged each to contribute his share towards making up the deficiency in the preceptor's pay, if any should be found, after receiving the tuition of the scholars. The institution was for several years under the direction of a board of trustees, consisting of James Breck, Joseph Farnsworth, William Cheney, J. D. Walcott, John B. McGregor, Alexander Boyd, and Hubbard Newton. A catalogue, published in 1823, contained the names of 69 students,—48 gentlemen and 21 ladies. The building erected for this institution was located on the south side of Elm street, at the east end of the bridge. It was placed there to accommodate the then comparatively large population on the west side of the interval. It was two stories high, and had ample rooms nicely fitted up. It was disposed of to District No. 2, and was finally destroyed by fire in 1843. When the Baptist church was remodelled, in 1841, and its audience-room raised several feet above the former floor, leaving a lower story, this was fitted up for an academy, and used for that purpose a number of years; but the court-room, being a more central as well as a more attractive place, was mainly used for that purpose, and upon the formation of the Union district, in 1874, it was fitted

Miss Nettie L. Bartlett, an efficient teacher, had charge of the Grammar school in Union district during the first four years after its formation. It has since been under the care of Miss Mary Chellis, of Plainfield, an experienced and competent teacher.

The Intermediate department has been taught by Georgia C. Wilcox, Ida L. Dunbar, Lizzie Rider, Mary Stafford, and Matie Chellis.

The "New Hampshire Gazetteer," printed in 1823, says,—
 "An academy was incorporated in 1818, is without funds, and the average number attending it is about 35. The town is divided into 14 school-districts, in most of which are handsome and convenient school-houses. The average number of scholars belonging to these districts is about 40 to each."

At the historical celebration, in 1846, when the town had been settled eighty years, it was reported that "thirty young men had received a collegiate education; that no child had been allowed to come to maturity without being taught to read and write; that, generally speaking, all had a good common-school education; and that they had 19 school-districts, besides a high school in the village."

Rev. James R. Wheelock, at the Congregational church, was a son of President Wheelock, of Dartmouth college, and it is thought that this circumstance had a potent influence in turning the attention of our young men to college life.

In 1870, by the census, there were in town 17 schools; 410 scholars,—224 males and 186 females; average attendance, 315; per cent. of attendance, 77; average number weeks school, 25; value of school buildings, $5,000; annual amount appropriated to schools, $3,341; average to each scholar, $8.15. Amount of school-money in 1877, $3,868.21. Until 1875 the town raised only so much money as was required by the laws of the state, and then only in the Union district.

CHAPTER XXIII.

TEMPERANCE.

IN all New England, prior to 1828, liquors of some kind were deemed an indispensable article in every family, and were used more or less freely by all. That the early settlers here were fully alive to their supposed beneficent qualities is sufficiently illustrated by the fact, that, tradition says, the first article of merchandise ever brought to town was a barrel of rum. All the stores and taverns were licensed to sell liquors, which they did freely; and at musters, town-meetings, and on other public days, special licenses were granted to individuals to sell near the place of meeting. Behind the bar, in all our taverns, were shelves on which were displayed decanters containing all kinds of liquor. One end of a counter, in all our stores, was devoted to drinking purposes. Every family had one or more decanters, which were kept constantly filled. Spirit was used at all social gatherings, on all public days, and at weddings and funerals. The social customs were such that the decanter and the toddy-stick were considered as the symbols of welcome; and the visitor who was not invited to a social glass hardly considered himself as well treated. Rum, which was the general beverage, was drank in various combinations. I give the formula for some of its preparations as then used, as approved by the State Historian: "The most common drink was toddy, which was simply rum and water well sweetened;—sling, used in cold weather, was rum and warm water sweetened;—eggnog, which was an egg well beaten, into which was stirred sugar, milk, and rum;—and flip, which was made by taking a mug of beer and sweetening it, into which was thrust a red-hot iron called a loggerhead, which made it foam; into this was dashed the spirit, and on this was grated a little nutmeg,—and it was ready for use."

As illustrating the habits of the times, I quote from the advertisements of our old merchants,—Cheney, Farnsworth, Nettleton, and Gilmore,—as they appeared in the columns of the Spectator in 1824, 1825, and 1826. Under one head, they read almost uniformly thus: “GROCERIES. Brandy, Am. & Holland Gin; W. I. & N. E. Rum; Gin; Madeira, Malaga, Current & Port Wines; Brown and Loaf Sugar; Teas, Coffee, Molasses & Starch,”—liquors always heading the list. And their books show that they were dealt out and used liberally by the whole community,—clergymen, deacons, church members, and the unconverted alike. Prior to 1828, two cider distilleries had been established for the manufacture of cider-brandy, which did a large business. The one at the top of Griffin hill, on the Unity road, was operated by Reuben Bascom, and the other, at Northville, was run by the Rev. Solomon Howe. Added to all this, the young orchards, which had been planted all over town, were yielding a bountiful harvest of apples, which were manufactured into cider, and large quantities were consumed annually, in some families amounting to many barrels. But this flood, which had so long inundated our town, was bound to see an ebb movement. Dr. Reuben Mussey, who stood at the head of the Medical college at Hanover, visited this town, Feb. 25, 1828, and delivered an address on “Rum: its history, its uses, and abuses.” After which, on the same day, was formed the first “Society for the Promotion of Temperance” in town. The following are the names of its members:

Rev. John Woods,	Christopher Newton, 2d,
Rev. Ira Person,	Calvin Messinger,
Col. Phinehas Chapin,	Carey Russell,
Capt. Matthew Buell,	Amasa Edes, Esq.,
Dea. Moses Noyes,	Matthew Buell, Jr.,
Hubbard Newton, Esq.,	Joseph Wilcox,
Dea. Joseph Farnsworth,	Capt. Seth Richards,
David Allen, Esq.,	Nathaniel O. Page,
Dr. John B. McGregor,	Charles H. E. Newton,
Dr. Alexander Boyd,	Dunbar Aldrich,
Phinehas Newton,	Moses P. Durkee,
Josiah Stevens, Jr., Esq.,	B. B. French, Esq.,
James Wheeler,	Col. James D. Walcott,
Cyrus Barton, Esq.,	Joseph Kimball.

Col. Phineas Chapin was chosen president, John Woods and Ira Person, vice-presidents, Amasa Edes, Esq., secretary, and Alexander Boyd, John B. McGregor, Hubbard Newton, and Joseph Farnsworth, executive committee.

A committee reports, in 1829, a sale of 3,851 gallons in town, against 4,716 gallons sold the previous year, showing an improvement of 865 gallons as the result of their year's labor.

This society was superseded Aug. 25, 1829, by a "Total Abstinence Society." A "Female Temperance Society" was also instituted the same year. In the September following, the Rev. Mr. Hewitt delivered an address at the South church to an audience estimated at nearly two thousand people.

In November, 1841, a new movement, called the "Washingtonian," was inaugurated by Messrs. Butters and Northall, of Boston, who were reformed inebriates. It was sought by this movement to make converts to the cause by having "reformed inebriates" relate their sad experiences. At their first annual meeting they reported a membership of nearly five hundred persons; and after the oration of Russell Streeter, on the following 4th of July, one hundred names more were added. In 1844, the selectmen were instructed not to license any store.

In 1849, three organizations were formed,—the "Sons of Temperance," the "Daughters of Temperance," and the "Cadets of Temperance," and exercised a potent influence for several years. They fitted up and dedicated a hall in Diamond mill. This year the hotels discontinued the liquor trade.

The "Good Templars," a society which met with closed doors, and to which ladies and gentlemen alike were admitted to membership, was started in January, 1867, and for several years exercised a healthful influence.

Another movement was made in 1872, when a reform club was organized, and weekly meetings have since been held. It has had a marked success, and its influences upon the community have been salutary. A. V. Hitchcock, C. H. Little, E. A. Whipple, Philip Royce, and H. P. Leavitt are among its leading members.

In 1873, a Catholic temperance society was organized. It was composed of Irish citizens, a large proportion of whom joined.

A Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized in May, 1877, designed for the promotion of temperance:—Mrs. Edward Wyman, president; Mrs. A. V. Hitchcock, Mrs. Putnam George, and Mrs. Jacob Reddington, vice-presidents; Miss Mary D. Chellis, secretary; Miss F. M. Hewlett, treasurer.

CHAPTER XXIV.

CEMETERIES.

THE PINE STREET CEMETERY, the earliest one in town, is situated on the west side of Pine street, just north of the residence of George H. Fairbanks. A tract of land for this purpose was presented to the town by Benjamin Bragg, by a deed bearing date Dec. 31, 1771. It had been used as a burying-place several years before the title was confirmed to the town. The first burial there was that of a child of Maj. Jesse Wilcox, the first child born in town. It was born Feb. 28, 1768, and died March 9 of the same year. Here are slabs, marble and slate, erected to the memory of Benjamin Giles, Ezra Parmelee, Christopher Newton, Samuel Church, the Wilcoxes, Hurds, and most of the early settlers.

The new PINE STREET CEMETERY, situated on the east side of Pine street, south of the Aiken residence, was purchased by the town, Aug. 29, 1814, and was used, by those needing new lots, for nearly ten years.

NORTHVILLE CEMETERY. At the annual meeting, March 10, 1795, it was "Voted that the town buy half an acre of land of Joel Wakefield for a burying-place, and fence it." The grounds were enlarged in 1876, by additions at the north and south. The beautiful pine trees which surround it were planted by public-spirited individuals residing in that part of the town. The tomb in that place was built by Jonathan Emerson in 1842. This is an important cemetery, is favorably situated, and has several fine enclosures. The old Baptist church, an important institution in its day, was located just south of the south line of this cemetery.

The MAPLE STREET CEMETERY, which is on the south side of Maple street and east of the Congregational church, was purchased in 1824, and was enlarged in 1855, at the south, to nearly twice its original extent. It has been the principal one used since its purchase. Tradition says there was an animated controversy over the question whether the new cemetery should be located here, or on the plateau north of the present Baptist church. The tomb in this cemetery was built in 1842 by Samuel Bailey, of Sunapee. The Cheney monument and enclosure, the first in town, were erected in 1852, and since then the many other monuments and enclosures which adorn the different cemeteries.

The need of more ample grounds, and a more favored location for the burial of the dead, and which should meet the wants of after generations, had long been felt; and in accordance with this feeling, the town, at the annual meeting in 1873, appointed a committee, consisting of George W. Nourse, Dexter Richards, Edmund Wheeler, Nathaniel O. Page, and Isaac A. Reed, to see whether the old grounds could any of them be enlarged, and to select suitable grounds for a new cemetery. The grounds at Northville, at their suggestion, have been enlarged; but the committee have thus far failed to agree upon a locality which combines all the desired requisites.

The regulations concerning the tolling of the bell, funeral ceremonies, and other matters relating to the burial of the dead, which have since been in practice, were adopted by the town at a meeting in 1841. They were prepared and submitted by Amasa Edes, Esq.

The old hearse, which was of home manufacture, and which had been in use many years, gave place, in 1876, to a new one, which is of more modern style, and cost $488.

The Catholic cemetery, on Summer street, was consecrated in August, 1877, by Bishop Healy. The land for this purpose had been purchased two years previous.

CHAPTER XXV.

MAINTENANCE OF THE POOR.

THE town has always exhibited a thoughtfulness and liberality towards those whose misfortunes made them dependent upon public charity for support. In common with other towns, in order to protect themselves, they sometimes resorted to the legal process of warning out of town those vagrants who had been sent here by other towns, or who, having had belonging elsewhere, voluntarily came here to obtain support, and had often omitted to tax them for the number of years in succession requisite to make them legal residents,—but to their own poor they were kind and generous. At first, the selectmen procured places for them; afterwards, their maintenance was contracted for with the forms of a public auction, being assigned, usually, to the lowest bidder, except such as a partial allowance would enable to remain with their friends. This practice continued until 1840. At this time the number of persons needing assistance was so greatly augmented by the great depression of business occasioned by the revulsion of the times, that it was thought expedient to purchase a town farm. Accordingly, a committee, consisting of Silas Metcalf, Amos Little, and J. M. Wilmarth, was appointed to look out a farm. After examining all the farms for sale in town, they reported in favor of the one now occupied by Augustus Wylie, at Northville, then owned by Nathaniel Cotton, and on the 10th of March this farm, of 220 acres, was purchased for the sum of $3,000; but the farm, not originally very well adapted to the purpose, and lacking, also, in the proper management, soon fell into discredit, and was sold, in 1845, to David Wheeler, Jr., for $2,500. Another farm,—the A. G. Savory place, on Thatcher hill, containing some 160 acres,—was purchased, in 1860, for $2,000. Subsequently the county farm was established, and to it were removed most of our poor; and the farm, no longer needed, was sold, in 1870, to Mr. George C. Dean, for the sum of $1,700.

One pecuniary advantage was thought to result to the town from owning a farm: it enabled the selectmen to get rid of those leeches who were preying upon the public, but who would rather earn their own bread than go to the poor-farm.

CHAPTER XXVI.

LAWYERS.

CALEB ELLIS was the first lawyer in town. He was born in Walpole, Mass.; graduated at Harvard college in 1793. When admitted to the bar he settled in this town, and here, in 1800, received his first political honors. From this town he removed to Cornish, and from there shortly after to Claremont. He was a representative in congress from 1805 to 1809; was a member of the council; and in 1811 was elected to the state senate. In 1812 he was one of the electors of president and vice-president. In 1813 he was appointed judge of the supreme court of New Hampshire, and continued in that office until his death, which occurred May 9, 1816, at the age of forty-nine years.

HUBBARD NEWTON, born Jan. 1, 1780, was a son of Christopher and Mary (Giles) Newton, who came from Groton, Conn., in 1779. His early youth was devoted to farming. After a thorough preliminary training, he entered Dartmouth college, and graduated with honor in the class of 1804. He chose the legal profession, the study of which he pursued in the office of Samuel Bell, Esq., at Francestown. He was admitted to the bar, and commenced practice in this town in 1806. He was at Amherst for five years, and subsequently, as law partner with his son, Wm. F. Newton, at Claremont, for two years, but spent most of his active life in his chosen occupation in his native town. He had a taste for agriculture, and was engaged for many years in farming. He was one of the originators and a trustee of the Newport academy, was superintending school committee, took a deep interest in educational matters, and was one of the earliest advocates of temperance on the basis of total abstinence, delivering many addresses in this and adjoining towns. He was moderator seven years, and a representative in 1814 and 1815. [See Literature, Press, and Genealogy.]

WEARE TAPPAN was born in East Kingston, N. H., March 3, 1790; fitted for college at Atkinson and Exeter academies; graduated at Dartmouth college in 1811; studied law with Judge Ellis, of Claremont; came to this town and commenced the practice of his profession. He was a law partner with Hubbard Newton, Esq. He shortly, however, removed to Bradford, and opened an office, where he continued in the practice of the law until his death, which occurred April 6, 1868, at the age of seventy-eight years. He married Lucinda Atkins, of Claremont, by whom he had five children, a part of them born here,—Mason W., the oldest son [see sketch]; Caroline L., wife of Daniel W. Carr; Elizabeth A., wife of Joseph K. Lund; Helen M., wife of Silas Wilkins, all residing at Bradford; and Charles C., a United States mail agent, residing at Concord.

AMASA EDES was born in Antrim, N. H., March 21, 1792. The greater part of his minority was spent at Peterborough. Resided also at West Brook, Me., and at Keene. He graduated from Dartmouth college in 1817; read law one year in the office of Wilson & Porter at Belfast, Me., and two years with James Wilson, senior, at Keene; and was admitted to the bar in 1822. In December of that year he came to Newport, where he has since continued in the practice of his profession. He has naturally a legal mind. It is related of him, as a lawyer, that in his very early student life the more advanced students in the same office would submit to him cases laid down in the books for opinion, and that his decisions, from his intuitive sense of justice, were almost uniformly in accordance with those given by the court. He was one of the pioneers in the cause of temperance, and has ever been its earnest advocate. He is also a warm friend of education, and was for several years principal of the New Ipswich academy, and subsequently of the academy at Newport.

He was a trustee of the Newport academy, and often one of the superintending school committee of the town. He was a representative in 1834, and is now President of the Sullivan County Bar.

DAVID HALE descended from a brother of Sir Matthew Hale, and was born at Alstead, in this state, in 1783. He was the oldest of a large family, and being obliged to provide means for his own education, was compelled to depend upon that hereditary mental wealth which for generations seems to have been the portion of his kindred. He had not the advantages of a college education, but his inquiring mind as well as assiduous habits of thought enabled him to take a prominent position among our scholars. He studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1811. He then opened an office in Newport, where he practised his profession until his death. He married Sarah Josepha Buell, oldest daughter of Gordon Buell, of Newport. He died in 1822, leaving five children, the oldest in his eighth year. To educate these children in some measure as their father would have done, was the motive which induced his widow to devote herself to literature. By the aid of the Masonic friends of her husband,—Mr. Hale having been a prominent Free Mason,—this object was successfully pursued. [See Genealogy.]

JOSIAH FORSAITH, son of Dea. William and Jane (Wilson) Forsaith, was of Scottish descent, and was born at Deering, N. H., Dec. 14, 1780, and died at Newport, March 30, 1846. He fitted for college, and was graduated at Dartmouth, in the class of 1807. He read law with Hon. George Baxter Upham and Hon. Caleb Ellis, both of Claremont. He was admitted to the bar, and practised his profession at Goffstown, in this state, and at Boston, Mass., from 1810 to 1822, at the end of which time he came to Newport, and here continued in practice until his decease. He took an interest in educational matters, gave private tuition, and was a superintending school committee. He was a representative in 1841. In connection with James Breck, Esq., he built the Eagle hotel, now Eagle block, which was a fashionable house, and in its day added greatly to the attractions of the village.

RALPH METCALF was born at Charlestown, N. H., Nov. 21, 1798. He was son of John Metcalf, who came to that place, in 1792, without money, without friends, and without acquaintance, and purchased the farm on which his son, Hon. Horace Metcalf, now lives, and who married the only daughter of John and Keziah (Nichols) Converse, who originated in Rhode Island, and grandson of Samuel Metcalf, of Oakham, Mass., who was an officer in the Revolution, and died soon after the close of the war, leaving seven sons and five daughters, and who married a lady by the name of Montague, who was of a highly respectable Irish family.

Mr. Metcalf lived with his father, laboring on the farm, till August, 1818, when, owing to a lameness, he decided to engage in some profession. He fitted for college at Chester academy, Vermont, under the charge of Joel Manning, Esq., and a Mr. Holton. In August, 1819, he entered Dartmouth college, and continued his studies till the fall of 1821, when, against the kind and sound advice of Professors Haddock and Chamberlain, he accepted an invitation to become a professor at Norwich University. The next year, however, at commencement, he was readmitted to his class, and graduated with them in 1823. He then entered the office of Gov. Hubbard, at Charlestown, where he remained two years, with the exception of three months, which he spent in the office of Richard Bartlett, Esq., of Concord. In the summer of 1825 he went into the office of Hon. George B. Upham, of Claremont, where he remained till he was admitted to the bar in September, 1826. He then came to Newport, and began practice in the office formerly occupied by David Hale, Esq., then lately deceased, where he remained until 1828, when he went to Binghamton, N. Y., residing there till 1830, when he returned to New Hampshire and opened an office at Claremont. In June, 1831, he was elected secretary of state, and removed to Concord. While secretary, he was appointed, by Gov. Badger and council, to the office of attorney-general, which office he declined. He held the office of secretary till 1838—seven years. Soon after this, Hon. Levi Woodbury, then secretary of the treasury, offered him a clerkship in his department at Washington, which he accepted, and held till 1840, when, not pleased with life at the capital, he resigned and returned to New Hampshire. While at Washington he was proffered the chair of an editor of one of the leading journals, with a most lucrative salary attached, which he declined. Upon his return, he opened an office at Plymouth, but remained less than a year, when he returned to Newport, where he had begun his professional career. In October, 1845, he was appointed register of probate for the county of Sullivan. He was a representative in 1852 and 1853; was one of a committee of three to codify the laws of New Hampshire in 1853; was trustee of the insane asylum in 1855; and governor of New Hampshire in 1855 and 1856.

Gov. Metcalf was a great lover of romance, and always read and re-read all the standard authors. He wielded a ready and humorous pen, and once won a valuable prize offered for the best original poem. Few are the men who are so fond of social life, or who have contributed so freely to its promotion. He died at Claremont, where he had removed, Aug. 26, 1858, aged 63 years.

In January, 1835, he married Lucretia Ann, daughter of Nathan Bingham, Esq., of Claremont. She died April 1, 1836, leaving an infant three weeks old, which died the August following. November 10, 1843, he married Martha Ann, daughter of Capt. John Gilmore, of this town.

Ralph, born Aug. 8, 1844; graduated at Norwich University; is a broker in Nebraska.

Frances E., born Aug. 16, 1845; married, Jan. 22, 1867, Col. McDermid, of Chicago, Ill.

BENJAMIN B. FRENCH [see Literature, also Press] was a clerk of the court while he remained in town. He was a lawyer by profession, and practised to some extent while here. His time, however, was mainly absorbed in his editorial and clerical duties.

EDMUND BURKE. The subject of this sketch was born in the town of Westminster, Vt., on the 23d day of January, 1809. His father was a farmer, not wealthy, but possessed of a competency quite sufficient for the support of himself and a numerous family. His circumstances, however, required that he should labor with constant industry,—the lot of most New England farmers,—and bring his family up to the same habits of active toil. The subject of this notice was not exempt from the salutary training and discipline in the habits of robust and health-giving labor, from which but few of the sons of the tillers of the soil are exempt. He labored with his father, from the time his age and strength would permit, until he was fifteen years of age, going to the common-school of the village in which he was born, in the summers in the tenderer years of his life, and during the winters when he had arrived at an age when his services were valuable and necessary upon the farm.

At the age of fifteen his father, unable to give him an academical education, but desiring that he should have every advantage in his power, to give him a respectable position in society, proposed that he should make an effort to become a member of one of the learned professions, offering to give him his time, and promising to extend to him such aid as might be in his power, if he would accept the generous offer of his parent. He readily embraced the opportunity, and immediately began the study of Latin, with the view of pursuing the study of the law. He continued the study of that language with great industry for six months, under the tutorship, first, of William F. Hall, Esq., formerly of Bellows Falls, Vt., and recently a clerk in one of the departments at Washington, and subsequently of the late Chief-Justice Henry A. Bellows of this state; and at the end of that time, being then in his sixteenth year, he entered as a student at law in the office of the Hon. William C. Bradley, of Westminster, then and for a long time one of the most eminent counsellors and jurists of the state. Mr. Bradley was also distinguished as a politician as well as lawyer, and possessed conversational powers of most remarkable eloquence and brilliancy. It is not strange that he should insinuate his opinions and principles (which were of the Democratic school of politics) into the mind of a susceptible and impressible young man. To this circumstance, and also to the hereditary principles of his family, enforced by the precept and example of his father,—who was a devoted disciple of the Jeffersonian school, and was also a man of extensive reading, for one in his station in life, and possessed of a strong mind,—Mr. Burke undoubtedly owes the very decided political cast of his character.

Having followed his professional studies during a period of nearly five years, the term required of students who had not the advantage of graduation at a college, Mr. Burke was admitted to the bar of Windham county in that state. He was soon after admitted in Cheshire county, in this state, and in the spring following (April, 1830) he emigrated to Coös county. He first settled in the town of Colebrook, but subsequently removed to Whitefield, where he made a permanent location. Mr. Burke remained in Whitefield, in the practice of his profession, until the fall of 1833, when he removed to Claremont, in Sullivan county, in order to take the editorial charge of a newspaper in that town called the Argus.

It is proper here to remark, that Mr. Burke has been often heard to observe that he never spent three years of his life so profitably as those he spent in the town of Whitefield. He says he went into Coös county with the impression that the people were less informed than those who lived in regions longer settled, but he soon found his error. On the contrary, he says he has never met with a community of men generally more intelligent, more imbued with strong common-sense, more patriotic in sentiment, and more generous in their feelings, than he found in Coös county. Among these people he laid in a large store of practical knowledge of men and things.

But to resume the thread of our narrative: His connection with the Argus was Mr. Burke's first introduction to the editorial profession, and perhaps the foundation of his subsequent political career. Of course the Argus, under his control, was a political paper, Democratic in its politics, and of very decided character. After publishing the Argus in Claremont till the autumn of 1834, Mr. Burke was induced to remove, with his paper, to this town, where, with the exception of a residence of five years at Washington, D. C., he has ever since resided, and now resides. A short period after his removal, the Argus was united with the New Hampshire Spectator, then owned by the Hon. Simon Brown,—the new paper assuming the title of Argus and Spectator, and being also, under the editorial control of Mr. Burke. Our space will not permit us to comment particularly on Mr. Burke's career as an editor while in charge of the Argus and Spectator.

It is sufficient to say, that, under his control, that journal advocated with great zeal the radical doctrines of the party to whose interests it was devoted, and, we believe, to the very general satisfaction of its patrons. It is due to Mr. Burke to say, that he started some doctrines in the columns of the Argus and Spectator, which were regarded by some of his own supporters as rather novel and startling at the time, but which have since become cherished articles of faith in the Democratic creed.

So industriously and ably had Mr. Burke conducted his paper, that at the end of three years he had acquired a reputation as a political writer which induced the late ex-President Polk, and the late Felix M. Grundy, then United States senator from Tennessee, to offer Mr. Burke the editorship of the Union, the leading Democratic organ of that state, published at Nashville, at a high salary. Mr. Burke accepted the offer, and published his valedictory in the Argus and Spectator, preparatory to his migrating to Tennessee. But many of his patrons, hearing of his intention, proposed to him to remain; and, as an inducement, they offered him the nomination for congress, then, by the usages of his party, due to Sullivan county. This high and unexpected compliment an aspiring and ambitious young man could not decline. He accordingly permitted his name to be used, and succeeded in obtaining the nomination. This was in the summer of 1838. In the election of March, 1839, Mr. Burke, with his colleagues on the Democratic ticket, was elected a representative for New Hampshire in the twenty-sixth congress of the United States, being then but thirty years of age. He took his seat in that body at the commencement of the session of 1839-40, and was subsequently twice reëlected,—making, in the whole, a congressional term of six years.

In referring to his congressional career, we think we do Mr. Burke no more than justice to say that it was creditable to himself and honorable to the state. He was a true party man, and the few speeches made by him while he was a member were devoted to the support of the principles and measures of the Democratic party. They secured to their author great popularity with his party. His speech upon the independent treasury, and also his speech upon the tariff, are monuments of intellectual labor, of which any man might be proud. They bear the marks of profound and critical research. But there was one speech delivered by Mr. Burke, while a member of congress, which commanded the applause of all his constituents, without distinction of party. We allude to his eloquent and beautiful defence of our state against the rude and unprovoked attack of a Mr. Arnold, a member from Tennessee. We have seldom read a retort so condensed, conclusive, and overwhelming. This effort alone entitles Mr. Burke to the gratitude and praise of every true son of New Hampshire, and fully justified his claim to the high regards of the native-born citizens of the Granite state. While a member of congress, he was also an active, industrious, and efficient member of important committees,—among others of the select committee appointed to investigate the suffrage movement in Rhode Island, of which he was chairman, and in which capacity he prepared a long report, based upon the principles of Democracy and of the constitution. It was regarded by the leaders of the Suffrage party as the best political history of Rhode Island ever written. The Rhode Island report is a monument to the capacity of Mr. Burke for rapid and efficient work. In consequence of an unexpectedly early adjournment of congress, Mr. Burke had but thirty-six hours in which to write his report, and arrange the voluminous documents connected with it, for publication. The report embraces one hundred large congressional printed pages and two hundred and thirty-two documents, all making eleven hundred and fifty printed pages of matter. Mr. Burke commenced this great labor on Saturday night, and on the next Monday morning the report was written, the documents all collated and numbered, and the report made to the House, precisely as it was subsequently printed.

At the close of Mr. Burke's congressional career, which was in the spring of 1845, his party having been successful in the preceding presidential election, he was, without solicitation or knowledge on his part, tendered by Mr. Polk, the new president, the office of commissioner of patents, which he accepted, and upon the duties of which he entered on the 5th day of May, 1845. He continued to perform the duties of that office until the accession of Gen. Taylor to the presidency, when he was superseded by Mr. Ewbank, of New York. In the discharge of the duties of this office, Mr. Burke displayed the same indefatigable habits of industry, and the same close and critical research, which had distinguished him in other positions. His reports, while commissioner of patents, embraced a vast amount of valuable information, gathered from a wide field of investigation, and presented in a form which made them both acceptable and popular with the country. Under Mr. Burke's administration the patent office assumed a position and importance which it had never before enjoyed, and contributed its full share to the popularity of Mr. Polk's administration.

But while Mr. Burke held the office of commissioner of patents, his labors were not altogether confined to the mere duties of his office. During that period he wrote those papers upon the tariff, entitled the "Bundelcund Essays," originally published in the Washington Union, but subsequently in pamphlet form, and circulated by tens of thousands in every state in the Republic. Referring to these papers, a writer in the Democratic Review says,—“After the close of the session of 1844 and 1845, when some of our timid friends began to express doubts as to the propriety of attempting to carry out the pledge of the Baltimore Democratic convention upon the question of the tariff, Mr. Burke, appreciating the danger which this hesitation threatened to the policy of the Democratic party, boldly stepped forward as its champion, and contributed to the columns of the Union the well-known series of essays on, or, rather, against, the protection system, published over the signature of ‘Bundelcund.’ Nothing before, emanating from his fruitful pen, had so served to spread his fame, for they were immediately republished, wholly or in part, in nearly every Democratic paper in the Union, and, from their appearance until the final vote on the tariff in 1846, were the object of incessant and virulent attacks from the opposition. The Democratic party, with few exceptions, planted themselves firmly on the principles there laid down by Mr. Burke, which, being adopted by the committee of ways and means of the house of representatives, and by the treasury department, were made the basis of the revenue law so triumphantly passed on the 30th of July, 1846.”

After Mr. Burke retired from the patent-office, he formed a connection with the late celebrated Thomas Richie, by which he became a joint editor of the Washington Union. He remained connected with the Union one year, during which he contributed a large amount of the editorial matter which appeared in its columns. He had, also, while he was at the head of the patent-office, been a liberal contributor to that paper, as well to its editorial columns as in the shape of communications. And we may truthfully add, that he has, for the last thirty years, been an industrious and fertile writer, as the columns of many newspapers can attest, and has achieved, by his labors in connection with the press, a high position among the editorial profession.

The term of Mr. Burke's connection with the Washington Union having expired, he, in the summer of 1850, returned, with his family, to his residence in this town, where he now remains in the practice of his profession, and employing himself in those literary pursuits congenial to a man of taste, and necessary to an active mind imbued with a desire for the accumulation of knowledge.

In conclusion, we will add, that Mr. Burke is truly a self-made man. In the outset of his career he had no friends possessed of wealth and influence to aid him. He had to depend upon himself alone. The writer of this has heard him remark that he graduated at a common village school, having never attended an academy or college a day in his life, and having had no other assistance or tuition than that which he received while acquiring a sufficiency of Latin preparatory to entering upon his legal studies. And he has informed us that he ceased to attend the village school at the age of fourteen, having never attended any school subsequent to that period. His success in life is a bright example of industry, perseverance, and energy, which we commend to the youth in humble circumstances who has the ambition to aspire to the higher positions of usefulness and honor in society.

He married, Dec. 1, 1840, Ann Matson [see following sketch]; married, 2d, Nov. 29, 1866, Mary Elizabeth Whitney, born Sept. 14, 1834. Had one daughter by first wife,—Frances Matson, born Oct. 7, 1847; married Col. George H. Dana.

Mrs. Ann Matson Burke, who is the subject of the following sketch, was the first wife of Hon. Edmund Burke, of this town. She was the daughter of the late Francis and Susan Matson, of Stoddard, N. H., and grand-daughter of the late Hon. Aaron Matson,—a man of property, influence, and note in his day; a member of congress from this state, besides holding many other offices of honor and responsibility under the governments of the state and the United States. Mrs. Burke was born in Stoddard, on the 20th day of June, 1823; was married to Mr. Burke on the 1st day of December, 1840; and died in this town on the 25th day of January, 1857, in the very prime and bloom of womanhood, being in the 34th year of her age at the time of her decease. Her grandmother, on her father's side, whose maiden name was Frances Carpenter, was a direct lineal descendant of Peregrine White, who was born on the Mayflower on its passage from England to this country, bringing its freight of pilgrims seeking a home and "freedom to worship God," who subsequently landed on Plymouth Rock, in Massachusetts, Dec. 20, 1620. Mrs. Aaron Matson, who, with her venerable and honored husband, spent the last years of her life in this town, in the immediate neighborhood and society of their grand-daughter and sole descendant, was a woman gifted with much more than ordinary ability. She received a superior education for the time in which she lived, and was possessed of many of the graces of character and manners which afterwards shone so conspicuously in her grand-daughter. As an incident, it is proper to remark that Mrs. Burke, in her lifetime, was the possessor of a copper tea-kettle, which, according to tradition in the family, was brought over in the Mayflower by the family of Mr. White, became the property of Peregrine, and from him has been handed down in a direct line of descent until it has come into the possession of Mrs. Frances M. Dana, the only daughter and child of Mr. and Mrs. Burke.

Mrs. Burke was educated at the academy of Miss Fiske, of Keene, N. H., one of the most celebrated seminaries for the education of ladies then known in New England, from which she graduated with high honor. Miss Fiske was a lady who did not forget the accomplishments of manner and person in her system of education; and of these Mrs. Burke acquired her full share.

Immediately after her marriage, she went to Washington with her husband, where she spent the winter, and subsequently was with him during other seasons, while he was in congress; and while he was at the head of the patent office, and during the time he was connected with the Washington Union, she was a permanent resident of that city. The official position of her husband gave her access to the most refined and polished circles of the political metropolis of the Union, an opportunity and advantage which she was quick to appropriate and improve.

Although the life of Mrs. Burke was of comparatively brief duration, she lived long enough to make a deep impression upon the social circle in which she moved, and upon her more intimate relatives and friends, inspiring in the hearts of the latter the most devoted love and attachment. She was a woman possessed of great beauty of person, and the most charming qualities of mind and disposition. She was gifted with conversational powers of great brilliancy; and in social converse with her friends, her whole soul seemed to be transfused into her countenance, giving her an animation, charm, and grace which won and captivated all who came within the circle of her presence. Her life was the constant expression of a beautiful character. She was always mild, amiable, and sympathizing, never uttering an expression to any one which could wound or offend. She was the idol of her own family circle, always swaying the sceptre of her domestic realm with love and gentleness. She was always forbearing and for peace. "Speak gently," and "a soft answer turneth away wrath," were the constant maxims by which her intercourse with others was guided. To the poor, and especially to those of her own sex, she was a ministering angel in their afflictions, always bestowing acts of kindness and charity, and personal services when needed. Notwithstanding her long residence in Washington, during which she mingled with the gayest and most cultivated circles of society, which might inspire in some persons a spirit of exclusiveness in her social relations, to her honor be it said, that to the influence of her example, more than to any other one cause, are we indebted for the absence of that spirit which would divide society into exclusive circles founded upon imaginary superiority, which has been the bane of so many towns, and the absence of which has rendered Newport the charmed village of New Hampshire.

Her last illness, which terminated in her death, and during which she was at times a great sufferer, was borne with heroic patience and resignation; and when the inevitable hour came, she sank into the arms of her Heavenly Father without a murmur, assuring her weeping relatives, in her last moments, that it was not hard to die. It is not strange that such a woman should be warmly loved in life, and deeply lamented in death. Her untimely departure from the scene of her earthly pilgrimage was felt to be a great loss to society as well as to her family, to whom she was endeared by the strongest ties of love and affection.

DAVID ALLEN, JR., was born Dec. 1, 1805. He spent most of his minority with his father at farm work. He was educated at the common-school and at the Newport academy; after which he went to Johnstown, N. Y., and spent several years in teaching. He turned his attention to the law, the studies of which he pursued with Hon. Edmund Burke, of this town, and with Hon. Ebenezer Allen, a brother, then at Orono, Me. After being admitted to the bar, he opened an office at Perrysburg, Ohio, but shortly returned to this town and took the office and law business of Hon. Edmund Burke, who was absent at Washington, D. C., where he was a member of congress and a commissioner of patents, and here continued the practice of his profession until his death, which occurred Sept. 1, 1851. He was a representative in 1849 and 1850, and was also a superintending school committee. Married Emeline B. Sanborn, of Sanbornton.

LEWIS SMITH, a nephew of Capt. Seth Richards, was born in Eastford, Conn., June 5, 1815. He fitted for college at Union academy, Bennington, Vt.; studied law two years in Vermont and two years with the Hon. Edmund Burke in this town, and was here admitted to the bar and commenced practice. He opened an office at Henniker in 1841, where he remained ten years; was five years at Nashua; since which time he has been at Hastings, Minn. In each place he has enjoyed a wide practice. He was clerk and assistant clerk of the New Hampshire house of representatives six years; was a member of the house and of the constitutional convention while at Henniker; secretary of the territorial council of Minnesota in 1857; and at different times has represented the county of Dakota in each branch of the legislature.

DAVID DICKEY, a graduate at Dartmouth college, was in practice here for several years, commencing in 1842, when he removed to Haverhill.

AUSTIN CORBIN, son of Hon. Austin Corbin, was born July 11, 1827. He was well educated, and at the age of nineteen commenced the study of the law, pursuing the same with Hon. Edmund L. Cushing, of Charlestown, since chief-justice of New Hampshire, and later with Hon. Ralph Metcalf, afterwards governor of the state. His legal education was completed at the Harvard Law School, where he received his degree in 1849. In that year he was admitted to the bar, and at once began practice as the partner of his former teacher, Mr. Metcalf. Here he practised for two years, and with great success, but, desiring a wider field, determined to remove to the West, which he did in the fall of 1851, locating himself at Davenport, Iowa.

In Davenport he resided till 1865. During all this time he was engaged in the practice of his profession,—first, alone, then as the senior partner of the firm of Corbin & Dow, and afterwards of Corbin, Dow & Brown. These firms took high rank in the state; and for some years no law firm in Iowa had a more extensive or more successful practice. During the later years, however, Mr. Corbin had very little to do in the active practice of his profession. In 1854 he became interested in banking, as the partner of Mr. Louis A. Macklot, under the firm name of Macklot & Corbin; and from that time on he occupied a very prominent position in the state in that business. In 1857 there were seven banks and banking-houses in the city; and in the severe times that followed the financial troubles of that year, every one suspended except that of Macklot & Corbin. That house met all demands promptly, and paid depositors in full.

In 1861, Mr. Corbin sold his interest in the house to his partner, and retired from the business; but in 1863, immediately upon the passage of the national currency act, he organized the First National Bank of Davenport, became its president, and commenced business on the 29th day of June, 1863, which was two days in advance of any national bank in the United States. The result of the organization of this bank was also most successful. In June, 1865, after the bank had been in business two years, and had paid dividends of 15 per cent. per annum, its stock was worth $250 on the books, and very soon thereafter sold for $300.

This year Mr. Corbin sold out all his stock, and nearly all the property he had in that county, and removed to New York, where he established himself in the banking business, and where he has since been. His first partner in New York was Mr. Gilman S. Moulton. He retired in 1870; and then Mr. Corbin organized "The Corbin Banking Company." This is a private company, under the laws of New York, issuing no notes, but with stock, as in other banks, except that all shareholders are individually liable to the extent of their entire estates for the debts of the company. Connected with him are several prominent capitalists; and the company stands high, as well in New York as in the West, where they do a very large business. A large part of this is the lending of money upon farms; and they are reported to have on their books collections of this character amounting to over $15,000,000. In this special class of investments they have larger dealings than any other firm in the world.

Mr. Corbin is also largely interested in stock companies for the investment of capital, outside of his own,—“The New England Loan Company,” at Manchester, N. H., and the “New England Mortgage Security Company,” at Boston. He has also large holdings of stock in the “American Mortgage Company of Scotland,” at Edinburgh, the Corbin Banking Company being its American correspondents.

But probably no undertaking of his life has met with such immediate and signal success as the organization of the Manhattan Beach enterprise near New York city. In 1873 he was compelled, under the advice of his physician, to go at once, with his sick child, to the seashore; and taking the nearest one at hand, went to Coney island. Here the family remained most of the summer, and during his sojourn he was astonished to find, within an hour of New York city, the finest sea-beach on the Atlantic coast. But its proximity to the great city had made it largely the resort of the worst portions of society; and, so far as its front was occupied, it was constructed of poor buildings. A portion—nearly half the island, and the best part—was wholly unoccupied, the titles being in very great disorder. This portion Mr. Corbin determined to secure, redeem from its bad reputation, and build up and preserve for the better classes of New York. After three years of work, and at great expense, he acquired all the titles, and had under his control an ocean front of $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles, and a territory of over 500 acres, extending from ocean to bay. He then organized a railway company, to which the whole was conveyed; and in 1877, on the 19th day of July, it was opened to the public. On the ocean a magnificent hotel—the finest seaside hotel in America—had been erected; extensive bathing-houses had been built; and the Railway hotel and grounds were crowded with guests the balance of the season. During the years 1877 and 1878, the railway carried over 1,600,000 people. It has been already a very great, and is destined in the future to be a much greater, blessing to the citizens of New York. Its hotel, its bathing facilities, and its police system, are unequalled in any city on this continent. Mr. Corbin has received from every source, public and private, high praise for the conception of this grand idea, and the grand manner in which it has been carried out. [See Genealogy.]

SAMUEL H. EDES, son of Amasa Edes, Esq., was born in Newport, March 31, 1825. After a preparatory course at Kimball Union Academy, he entered Dartmouth college, graduating in 1844, the youngest member of his class; studied the profession of law in his father's office, and was admitted to Sullivan county bar in 1851. He has twice held the office of county solicitor, having been appointed in the years 1854 and 1874; and was chosen to represent the town in the legislature in 1860. He was an untiring and zealous workman in the cause of the common-schools of the town, and did much towards promoting the Union district scheme of the village schools, and is now an officer of its board of education. He was also actively engaged in the organization of the fire department of Newport on its present efficient basis. In addition to the business of his profession, he has been quite largely engaged in farming, and since 1865 as a manufacturer of flannels at the Eagle Flannel Mills in Newport; also in the dry goods and millinery trade, in connection with his son, George C. Edes. The aqueduct supplying pure water to the village from Cold spring, about one mile in length, was constructed by him in 1856, and relaid with New Jersey patent iron and cement pipes in 1862,—the first laid in the state.

LEVI W. BARTON, son of Bazaleel Barton, 2d, was born in Croydon, March 1, 1818. The pecuniary condition of his father's family was such as to demand his time and labor in early boyhood; and hence his attendance upon the district school was restricted to short terms in the winter season—and these with occasional interruptions—until his eighteenth birth-day, after which he attended several terms at the academy at Unity. In 1839 he married Miss Mary A. Pike, of Newport. She died the following year. After securing a home for his infant son—afterwards the late Col. Ira McL. Barton—in the family of a sister, Mrs. Amos Kidder, then at Canaan, he commenced a preparatory course of study at Kimball Union Academy, with a zeal which would listen to no discouragements. He entered Dartmouth college in July, 1844, and was graduated in the class of 1848. During his senior year at college he began reading law with Hon. Daniel Blaisdell, of Hanover. Immediately after graduating he commenced teaching in the Canaan academy, and at the same time entered, as a student, the law office of Hon. Jonathan Kittredge,—since a judge of the supreme court,—where he remained till January, 1851, when he came to Newport, and finished his course of legal study with Messrs. Metcalf & Corbin, and was here admitted to the bar in July of the same year. He immediately opened an office in Newport, where he has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession. He was a law partner of Hon. Ralph Metcalf at the time of his election as governor in 1855. While his professional duties have claimed a large share of his attention, he has found time to engage, to some extent, in farming, stock-raising, and fruit-growing.

In 1855, '56, and '57, he was register of deeds for Sullivan county; was county solicitor from 1859 to 1864; was representative in 1863, 1864, 1875, 1876, and 1877; and was state senator in 1867 and 1868. He has held a leading position in the house and senate; and, during his entire term of service in both branches, has been a member of the judiciary committee, and for five years its chairman. During the sessions of 1875 and 1876 he was chairman of the Republican legislative caucus, and as such did much towards moulding legislation, and the avoidance of extreme measures which might have resulted in injury. In 1866 he was chairman of a board of commissioners appointed by the governor to audit and report the war indebtedness of the state. He was a member of the convention for the revision of the state constitution in 1876, and the same year one of the Republican electors of president and vice-president of the United States. He was appointed bank commissioner by Gov. Harriman, but declined. He was appointed in 1877 one of the commission to revise and codify the laws of New Hampshire, which duty he performed. He has been twice a candidate for congress, and, though failing of a nomination, received a liberal support. August 25, 1852, he was again married to Miss Lizzie F. Jewett, of Nashua. [See Genealogy.]

SAMUEL METCALF WHEELER, son of Albira, and grandson of Dea. Abel Wheeler, was born August 9, 1823, in Newport. He was educated mainly at our common-schools, with subsequent advantages afforded him at academies in Vermont, his father having removed to Royalton in that state in 1841. Choosing law as his profession, he commenced its study in the office of Tracy & Converse, then the leading lawyers of the state, at Woodstock, Vt. He returned to Newport and, after spending several months in the office of Metcalf & Corbin, was here admitted to the bar in 1847. He then opened an office here. After a brief but successful practice of three years here, he removed to Concord, and from thence, shortly after, in 1853, to Dover, where he soon became a leading member of the Strafford county bar, a position which he has maintained for twenty-five years, and which he still retains. Since his residence in Dover, he has been connected nearly all of the time with the banking institutions of that city, as director or trustee. In January, 1858, he was elected president of the Langdon Bank, as he was also that of the Dover National Bank upon its formation in 1865. He has been a member of the legislature five years, and in 1869 and 1870 was speaker of the house. He was a member of the staff of Gov. Stearns, and at one time was a prominent candidate for member of congress. He was a delegate to the constitutional convention of 1876, and took an active part in its deliberations. He married, May 17, 1852, Priscilla E. Clement, of Franklin, a lady of culture. He has two daughters, both of whom are educated,—Sarah A., born Nov. 10, 1854, and Betsey J., born April 1, 1856.

ALBERT S. WAIT was born April 14, 1821, in Chester, Vt. He studied law with Hon. Daniel Kellogg, in the village of Saxton's River; was admitted to the bar at Newfane, Vt., in April, 1846, and immediately after entered upon the practice of law at Alstead, N. H. He removed to Newport in May, 1857. In June, 1865, he received the honorary degree of A. M. at Dartmouth college. He is an active Free Mason, in the various bodies of which he has held several prominent offices, and is now (1878) Grand Commander of the Knights Templars of the state. He was a delegate to the Chicago Democratic national convention in 1864; three times a candidate of his party for representative to the general court, and twice for state senator; but his party being in the minority, he was never elected. [See Literature.]

SHEPHERD L. BOWERS, son of James and Nancy (Symonds) Bowers, was born at Acworth, Dec. 13, 1827. He continued on the farm with his father until the age of twenty years, when he commenced a course of study. Had his preparatory training at Kimball Union Academy, in this state, and at Thetford academy, Vermont. He defrayed his own expenses, while fitting for college, by teaching, in which he was engaged at Fitchburg and Leominster, Mass., and the high school in his native town. He entered Dartmouth college in 1852. He soon, however, turned his attention to law, and studied his profession in the office of Hon. Asa Fowler, of Concord, since judge of the supreme judicial court. He was admitted to the bar in 1856, and the same year came to this town and began the practice of law, in which he has since continued. He was appointed register of probate for Sullivan county in 1861, and held the office until 1871. He was a representative to the legislature in 1865, and a delegate to the Republican national convention at Baltimore in 1864. He was reappointed register of probate in 1876, which office he still holds. He was one of the originators of the board of education for the Union district, and has been superintending school committee for the town at different times.

J. C. CROOKER had a law office in town for a number of years, beginning about 1846. He was for a while a preceptor in the academy here and at Unity. He went to the West, where he has since been in the practice of his profession. He married, Dec. 13, 1848, Sarah B. Slayton, of Woodstock, Vt.

GEORGE S. BARTON, son of Hon. Cyrus Barton, the founder of the Argus and Spectator, graduated at Dartmouth college in 1851; was admitted to the bar in 1853, and opened an office at Burlington, Iowa. The following year he came to Newport, and went into practice with the Hon. Edmund Burke. He was clerk of the New Hampshire senate in 1855 and 1856, and died the following July, aged 26 years. [See Literature.]

WILLIAM F. NEWTON, son of Hubbard Newton, Esq., was born at Newport, Nov. 23, 1818. In early youth he learned the trade of printing, which he followed for a few years. After a preparatory course, he entered the profession of law in his father's office, and was admitted to the Sullivan county bar in 1843, where he has since been engaged in practice. He has held the office of clerk of the courts for Sullivan county for several years, and other positions of trust. In connection with his other business, he has to some extent engaged in farming and gardening, and as a cultivator of strawberries, marketing a hundred bushels or more in a single year. He married, March 23, 1876, Julia, daughter of David McQueston, M. D., of Washington, N. H., who was born April 22, 1825.

BROOKS K. WEBBER, son of Maximilian J. Webber, studied law, and, after being admitted to the bar, opened an office in this town, but after a brief practice removed to Hillsborough, where he now resides. He has been twice a representative from that town.

W. H. H. ALLEN was born at Winhall, Bennington county, Vt., December 10, 1829. At the age of sixteen he came to Surry, N. H., where he spent three years at farm work, teaching, and attending school. He fitted for college with Joseph Perry, Esq., of Keene; entered Dartmouth college in 1851; was graduated there in the class of 1855; taught the high school at Hopkinton, Mass., one year. He read law with Wheeler & Faulkner and F. F. Lane, of Keene, and Burke & Wait, in this town, and was here admitted to the bar in September, 1858. He was appointed clerk of the courts for Sullivan county in 1858, and held the office until 1863, when he was appointed paymaster in the U. S. army, which office he held until the close of the war. He practised law here until March, 1868, when he removed to Claremont. While here, he was a moderator in 1863, and again in 1866. He held the office of judge of probate from 1867 to July, 1874; was appointed register in bankruptcy in 1867, and a judge of the supreme court of New Hampshire in 1876, a position he still holds. He is president of the board of trustees of the State Normal School. He was editor of the Sullivan Republican so long as it existed,—from January, 1859, to the spring of 1861,—when it was suspended. He married Ellen E. Joslin, of Surry, in 1856. She died in 1873, and the following year he married Sallie S. Sabin, of Claremont, a daughter of Dr. John Sabin, of Strafford, Vt.

IRA McL. BARTON, son of Hon. Levi W. Barton, was born in Newport, March 11, 1840. He commenced teaching at the age of seventeen, and taught with marked success in Newport, Claremont, and Alstead; was fitted for college at Kimball Union Academy, and entered Dartmouth college in 1858, but, without graduating, began the study of law in the office of his father, and was admitted to the bar in 1863. On the breaking out of the Rebellion, he raised a company of three months volunteers; was appointed captain, receiving one of the first commissions issued, and served under Col. Tappan. At the expiration of his term, he recruited another company, and joined the Fifth New Hampshire Regiment, known as the "Fighting Fifth," under Col. Cross, in which he was commissioned captain; served under Gen. McClellan, in the peninsula campaign; was at the battle of Fair Oaks, the Seven Days' Fight, and the retreat to Harrison's Landing. He resigned on account of ill-health. When able to enter the service again, he was commissioned captain of Company B, Heavy Artillery, and was stationed at Fort Constitution, Portsmouth harbor, and subsequently at Fort Foot, near Washington. In the summer of 1864 he organized a regiment of heavy artillery, of which he was commissioned lieutenant-colonel, and, being put in command, was stationed at Fort Sumner, where he remained till the close of the war; soon after which, he received the appointment of second lieutenant in the regular army, and was stationed at Pine Bluff, Ark.; was promoted to first lieutenant. At the end of two years he resigned his commission. He was appointed district attorney for the tenth district of Arkansas, and afterwards judge of the criminal court for the county of Jefferson in that state. He was part owner of the Jefferson Republican, a weekly paper published at Pine Bluff, and for a short time its chief editor. He returned from Arkansas in December, 1875, and became law partner with his father, where he continued until his death, which occurred Jan. 19, 1876. He married, in 1861, Helen M. Wilcox, of Newport; his second wife was Addie L. Barton, of Ludlow, Vt.

GEORGE R. BROWN, son of Aaron and Eadey (Watts) Brown, was born March 4, 1838, at Acworth. After a preparatory course, he entered Tufts college, where he graduated in 1866. He studied law with the Hon. Edmund Burke, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1868, and commenced practice here. He was appointed register of probate in 1871, and held the office until 1876. He has been a superintending school committee in this town several times, and was one of the committee to organize the Union school district. He has been a preceptor in the academy here and at Walpole.

ARTHUR C. BRADLEY, son of Jonathan D. Bradley, and grandson of Hon. William C. Bradley, an eminent lawyer of Westminster, Vt., is a man of scholarly attainments. He was graduated from Amherst college at the age of twenty, and afterwards from Columbia Law School, in New York city. He devoted one year to the especial study of patent law, in the office of a distinguished attorney in New York; after which he came to this town, was admitted to the Sullivan county bar, entered into partnership with Hon. Edmund Burke, and here commenced the practice of his profession. He now resides in the city of New York.

NATHAN E. REED, son of Jonathan E. and Deborah R. (Hunt) Reed, was born in Burlington, Mass., the 22d day of April, 1848. In the spring of 1852, his father removed to Charlestown, N. H., where they remained one year, when they came to Newport, and settled on Pike hill. At seventeen years of age he commenced his studies, which he pursued at the academies of New London and Claremont. At the end of three years he went to Boston, and entered the store of Messrs. Stone, Richardson & Parker, as clerk. At the end of six months he became a travelling salesman through New Hampshire, and remained in that position until March 15, 1870, when he went to Laporte City, Iowa, and went into the lumber trade, establishing the first lumberyard in that place. In 1872, in connection with a partner, he built an elevator, and commenced buying and shipping grain, in which business he continued until the great Chicago fire. He had been for several years, at his leisure hours, studying law, and in the fall of 1872 entered the office of George Bishop, of Laporte City, as a student, where he continued until Nov. 18, 1873, when he was by the circuit court of Black Hawk county, Iowa, admitted to practice. In April following he opened an office in this town, and in March of the following year he became the law partner of Hon. Edmund Burke, with whom he remained one year, when they dissolved their connection in business, and Mr. Reed opened an office by himself, and has since continued in the practice of his profession. He married, Feb. 24, 1870, Stella M. Slader, daughter of Samuel L. Slader, Esq., of Acworth; child, Lewis Ellsworth, born Nov. 11, 1872, at Laporte City, Iowa.

[Mason W. Tappan, of Bradford, and William P. Wheeler, of Keene,—the former a native, and the latter a former resident of this town,—though residing in other towns, have been in constant practice here during their whole professional lives, and hence we include them in this chapter.]

MASON W. TAPPAN, son of Weare Tappan, Esq., was born at Newport, October 20, 1817, and at an early age removed with his father's family to Bradford, where he has since resided. He fitted for college, but, without graduating, studied law with his father and Hon. George W. Nesmith, since judge of the supreme judicial court, and was admitted to the bar in 1841. He commenced business as law partner with his father at Bradford, where he soon had an extensive and varied practice, extending not only into Merrimack, but other counties of the state. He has also had an office at Concord, where, in connection with other partners, he has for many years been doing a leading business. As a lawyer, he has long enjoyed a high rank in his profession, both as a counsellor and an advocate. He has been in constant practice at the bar in this town. In July, 1876, he was appointed attorney-general of the state, which office he now (1878) still holds.

He was elected to the legislature, from Bradford, in 1853, '54, and '55, and was a prominent member of the house. He was a candidate for speaker of the house in 1854, and came within two votes of an election, so great was his popularity, notwithstanding the party to which he was opposed had a majority of about twenty in the house. He was elected a member of congress in 1855, and was reëlected in 1857 and again in 1859, serving in all six years. In the 34th and 35th congresses, he served on the judiciary committee; and in the 36th was chairman of the committee on claims. In the 36th congress, in the winter of 1860-61, he was upon the celebrated committee of thirty-three—one from each state—to whom was referred so much of the president's annual message as related to the then disturbed state of the country. While in congress he was a prominent and active worker.

On the call of President Lincoln for volunteers for three months, for the suppression of the rebellion, Mr. Tappan was one of the first men in the state to enlist, and when the 1st Regiment was organized he was appointed its colonel. This regiment was mustered into service on the 1st of May, 1861, and on the 25th of the same month started for the seat of war. This being the first regiment from the state, it was cheered by continued ovations all along its route. At New York they were presented, by the sons of New Hampshire in that city, with a beautiful flag. The regiment, though never engaged in actual battle, rendered important service to the Union cause by its promptness at the seat of war, and its readiness for any duty. When Col. Whipple resigned the command of the 4th Regiment, his place was offered to Col. Tappan; but he declined, assigning as a reason that it would be unjust to Lieut-Col. Bell and other officers of the regiment.

Mr. Tappan has always taken a deep interest in the political and other material interests of the state. He was an earnest advocate of the Concord & Claremont Railroad, and holds in high regard his native town.

WILLIAM PLUMMER WHEELER, son of Col. Nathaniel and Huldah (Whipple) Wheeler, was born in Croydon, July 25, 1812. He spent most of his youth and a part of his early manhood in this town, engaged in the harness business. He however became convinced that the law was a more congenial calling, and, in accordance with this idea, sold out his business, and from that time forward devoted his time wholly to fitting himself for that profession. He had his preliminary literary training at Kimball Union Academy, where he spent three years, after which he turned his attention to the study of the law, which he pursued at Keene, at Harvard University,—the law department of which was then under the charge of Judge Story, of the United States court,—and in Boston, at which place he also had a brief practice. He was admitted to the bar in 1842, and opened an office at Keene, where he had a wide practice, and where he was actively engaged in his profession until his death, which occurred in May, 1876. He was a solicitor for Cheshire county ten years, and in 1851 was appointed a justice of the court of common pleas, which position he declined, preferring to continue in the practice of his profession. He was several times afterwards tendered a seat upon the bench of the supreme court of the state. In 1855, and again in 1857, he was a candidate for congress in the 3d district. He was a trustee of the State Reform School, and also of the State Agricultural College, in which latter institution he took a deep interest. He was instrumental in locating it at Hanover, in connection with Dartmouth college, and in obtaining liberal bequests in its favor,—particularly that of Mr. Culver, whose donation built Culver hall, one of the finest educational structures in New England. He was president of the Keene Savings Bank, an important institution, at the time of his death. He was prominent among those who organized the Episcopal church at Keene, and was always an active and liberal promoter of its interests while he lived. He received the degree of LL. D. at Harvard university in 1842, and that of A. M. at Dartmouth college, in 1850. He married, Nov. 19, 1849, Sarah D. Moulton, of Randolph, Vt., born March 4, 1825. Children,—Alice, born Dec. 5, 1853; William G., born March 8, 1857, now a banker at St. Paul, Minn.

The following resolution, presented by Hon. Edward L. Cushing, recently chief-justice of the supreme court of New Hampshire, was passed by the Cheshire county bar on the third Tuesday of October, 1876:

“Resolved by this bar, that by the death of William P. Wheeler, Esq., the profession has lost an illustrious ornament, the state a useful and eminent citizen, and the country a wise and patriotic Christian man.”

During the obsequies all places of business in the city were closed, and every mark of respect and reverence shown.

The following are among those natives or former residents of this town who have turned their attention to the law, and have practised in other places. Some of them have been eminent in their profession. An account of them will be found in the Genealogy: Ebenezer Allen, at Austin, Texas; Daniel J. Atwood, at Boston, Mass.; Horatio Buell, at Glens Falls, N. Y.; William Breck, at Rochester, N. Y.; James Breck, Jr., at Chicago, Ill.; William Franklin Bascom, at Orwell, Vt.; Tully Bascom, in Ohio; Jonas Cutting, a supreme judge in Augusta, Me.; James Corbin, at Santa Fé, Texas; Rufus Claggett, at Brooklyn, N. Y.; Charles H. Chapin, at St. Louis, Mo.; William J. Forsaith, at Boston, Mass.; Horatio Hale, at Philadelphia, Penn.; William G. Hale, at New Orleans, La.; Solomon Heath, at Belfast, Me.; Elijah D. Hastings, at St. Louis, Mo.; Henry H. Metcalf, at Littleton, N. H.; David Fletcher Huntoon, at Grand Haven, Mich.; Erastus Newton, at Lockport, N. Y.; Ira B. Person, at New York city; Simeon Wheeler, Jr., at Portsmouth, Va.; Charles H. Woods, at Minneapolis, Minn.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

MUSIC.

NEWPORT, as a town, has always taken a commendable interest in music, has always been its liberal patron, and has devoted much time and money to its advancement. Among its inhabitants has always been found a full average of musical talent.

The leading singer and most successful teacher of vocal music among the early settlers was Matthew Buell, Jr., who came with his father from Connecticut. He was the leader of the Congregational choir. He made music a sort of profession, and taught in a large circle of neighboring towns and at the West. At the same time, at the north part of the town was Mr. Philip W. Kibbey, the leader of the Baptist choir, who as a singer had nearly the same traditional merit. At the historical celebration of this town, in 1846, the Rev. Dr. Stow, in his oration, paid in substance the following tribute to their musical talents: "Since leaving the home of my parents, I have travelled much in my native land, and much in Europe. In the presence of my wider observation the once magnificent Sugar river has become an humble stream, and its banks seem not far apart; and the once grand, awe-inspiring Coit has dwindled in its proportions;—but nowhere, in town or in country, in church or cathedral, have I heard music so sweet, so thrilling, so full of soul, as that led in my boyhood by those glorious champions, Matthew Buell and Philip W. Kibbey."

In addition, the following men have each in their day been teachers and leaders of the different choirs: At the Congregational,—Oliver Lund, John B. McGregor, Luther Webber, S. J. Allen, Francis Boardman, James H. Parmelee, Augustus Whitney, A. S. Wait, D. P. Quimby, M. R. Emerson, and B. R. Allen,—the latter having rare talent in drilling and leading a choir. At the Baptist,—Elias Metcalf, Timothy Fletcher, Adolphus King, Asa and James B. McGregor, Abel Wheeler, A. L. Kibbey, Oliver B. Jenks, Walter W. King, and Henry M. Chase. At the Methodist, Thomas A. Twitchell, R. A. Webber, Charles S. Partridge, and E. Darwin Cummings. At the Unitarian, William H. Belknap and Nathan E. Reed.

Among the ladies who have enjoyed a popularity as singers are Hannah Tenney, Mary G. Newton, Caroline L. Forsaith, Abby Jones, Maria Buell, Lucia Dean, Augusta Allen, Lois Kibbey, Isabel Averill, Mary Larned, Ida Sanderson, Mrs. Dr. Brown, Minnie Harvey, Lizzie Barton, Lucy E. Nettleton, and Emma H. Baldwin.

Among the leading bass singers are M. W. Allen, A. F. Nettleton, J. M. Bartlett, Henry P. Coffin, and George Pressey.

Among the most prominent and successful singers and teachers of vocal music was Elnathan Duren, who resided at Charlestown, but flourished here in the musical line from about 1820 to 1835. He had resided in Boston, and was a prominent member of the Boston Handel and Haydn Society. A contemporary says of him,—“For twenty years he was the most powerful and majestic singer, the most accomplished leader, and the most successful teacher of vocal music known to the general public in all New England. His talents as a composer of music were amply attested by many of the finest sacred airs and anthems. He had an extraordinary compass of voice, and his performances, in solos, duets, and anthems, were unrivalled. For fifteen years he conducted the musical exercises on commencement days at Dartmouth college.” His many years of faithful service in this town enabled us better to appreciate the excellences of the higher grades of music.

Prof. H. E. W. Barton, a native of Croydon, and a brother of Hon. Levi W. Barton, of this town, had a fine voice, which was thoroughly cultivated by the best musical professors of Boston. He was one of the finest instructors. He resided in this town for several years, and while here was a successful teacher and the leading singer.

The Newport Instrumental Music Society was incorporated in June, 1815, having a fund of $500. Their monthly meetings were held on Wednesday preceding the full of the moon.

Among those who have been most successful with the piano are Mrs. S. C. Phillips, as a teacher, Mrs. D. P. Quimby, Emroy Barron, now the wife of Hon. John M. Shirley, of Andover, Etta M. Guild, Willie A. Edes, Mattie Wheeler, and May Howard.

The Arion Quartette Club, consisting of four of the best singers in town, flourished in 1870, and won golden opinions wherever they went.

The Quadrille Band, led by William H. Belknap, superintended all the dances for several years. It was organized as early as 1856, was well trained, and quite popular.

ORGANISTS. Marion McGregor, daughter of Dr. John B. McGregor, now Mrs. Christopher of New York, was the first person in town to master the organ, and the high position which she has held for so long a time, in the first churches of the cities of Rochester and New York, gives her a rank among the leading organists of the country.

Mrs. Ellen P. Kimball, daughter of the late Dea. D. B. Chapin, the present organist at the South (Congregational) church, who to rare natural gifts has added superior culture, has with our leading connoisseurs long been the favorite player.

Among others who have enjoyed a popularity, Zamira Gleason, late wife of S. F. Lund, a charming player, Prof. A. P. Wyman, Mrs. Ira Mitchell, and Frank A. Sibley should be mentioned.

Among those who have given their attention to martial music, the first position should be assigned to Mr. Sylvester H. E. Wakefield, by all who were permitted to listen to the rattle of his youthful drum, or the thrilling notes of his silvery bugle in maturer life. James Morris Evarts, an educated and gentlemanly journeyman printer, was the champion flute player. The mellow tones of his enchanting instrument, heard in the choir as well as on the parade ground, are still remembered with the greatest pleasure by those who were his once charmed listeners. Carl Krebs, afterwards a distinguished clarinet player in Boston, had his home here in 1860, and produced quite a sensation by exhibitions of his wonderful skill with the instrument. The clarinet of Abijah Dudley, the fifes of David Harris and Ransom Pike, and the drum of Willard Harris, were indispensable to the complete success of all military trainings and musters. Walter W. King was a favorite bugle player in the days of musters.

In 1815, Col. Wm. Cheney was instrumental in forming a band, which was well maintained and quite popular for a long time.

The Newport Band was organized in 1840, with Mr. S. H. E. Wakefield as leader. It enjoyed the instructions of Mr. A. Bond, of Concord. It was well sustained for many years.

The Newport Cornet Band, B. R. Allen, leader, made its first appearance in public in July, 1860. Two years after, in October, 1862, the full band, eighteen pieces, enlisted for the war in the nine months service. Soon after its arrival at the seat of war, it was appointed a brigade band. It was thoroughly drilled, and had among its members some of the finest players, and enjoyed while it existed an enviable popularity. Soon after their return home, it was discontinued, several of its best players having left town. Marcine Whitcomb was for a while a leader of the band. It was revived again in 1875, and enjoyed the instruction of a Mr. Prosho, a German of superior skill. It is now led by Charles A. Puffer.

The Sullivan County Musical Convention met here in June, 1848. It was under the direction of Lowell Mason and George G. Webb, of Boston. It was an occasion of much interest, and was fully attended. It had another session here again in September, 1851. It was this time under the direction of Professors Baker and Southard, assisted by a Miss Cobb, of Boston, and was again full of interest, and most satisfactory.

SULLIVAN COUNTY MUSICAL ASSOCIATION. This association was organized Sept. 27, 1872. It has been one of the most popular and successful institutions of the kind ever held in the county. At the first annual meeting, held September, 1873, Solon Wilder was conductor, and Joseph P. Cobb, of Boston, pianist and humorist. At the close of this convention, which was holden in the new town hall, they were so well pleased with their accommodations in all respects, that they voted unanimously that the annual meetings of the association be permanently located in this town. The annual meetings of this association have since been assisted by the best musical talent of New England.

Conductor—From 1874 to 1878, inclusive, Prof. L. O. Emerson, of Boston.

Humorists—H. C. Barnabee, of Boston, 1874, '75; Joseph P. Cobb, of Boston, 1877, '78.

Soloists—G. W. Foster, H. M. Chase, F. F. Haskall, Geo. LeClair, E. A. Wood, Geo. L. Sanborn, Mrs. H. M. Smith, H. E. Carter, A. D. Shannon, Misses Sally M. Clough, Lena Partridge, Ella M. Smith, Clara D. Haubrick, Ophelia Baker, Anna C. Holbrook.

Piano Accompanist—Mrs. Martha D. Shepard, of Ashland, N. H.

CHAPTER XXIX.

WEDDINGS.

FROM the earliest records down, it would seem that the people of Newport, in common with the rest of the world, have been inclined to marry and be given in marriage. Tradition says that the first marriage in town was solemnized under the shadow of a tall, wide-spreading, grand pine tree, which stood near the present residence of Dea. Joseph Wilcox, the one under which the early settlers first met to worship, and which was in the midst of a most charming wood. It was honored by the presence and hearty good wishes of all the settlers.

The style of weddings, like most other matters, has been undergoing constant change, and may be divided into four epochs. During the first period, when there were comparatively few settlers in town, and they, from their isolated condition in the wilderness, had learned the full value of friendships and neighborly offices, and each seemed to the other more precious than a brother, all were desired and expected to be present. As there were but few horses and carriages in town, they attended weddings on sleds or in carts, drawn by oxen. Those without teams were always taken along by their more fortunate neighbors, so all might be present. We are informed by one of the descendants, that when Mr. Jonathan Brown was married, in 1777, at the house of Amos Hall, on the Unity road, the whole town was invited, and two sleighs,—all there were in town,—and twenty-four ox-sleds were present at the wedding.

During the second period the settlers had become too numerous to be all accommodated in the comparatively humble dwellings of that day, and especial invitations were sent to the relatives and more intimate friends. Horses had now become plenty, and all attended on horseback. As they rode along in pairs, all gaily attired, while attending the bridal couple to their new home, the cavalcade, often very long, presented an imposing and beautiful appearance. In that day every lady was an expert horseback rider. The side-saddle, often a very elegant and expensive affair, was an indispensable thing, and always stood at the head of that list of bridal fixings which the parents were expected to furnish their daughters upon marriage.

It was during the third period, when the roads were in a better condition, and vehicles of various kinds had become sufficiently numerous, that saddles were discarded, and all rode in carriages. For many years after the introduction of the chaise,—a two-wheeled carriage with a top,—the man that should presume to attend a wedding without one would have been considered as wanting in due respect for himself and his host, and might almost expect to be met at the door with the question, "Friend, how camest thou in hither not having on the wedding garment?" It was at this time that the habit of serenading the newly-married couple grew up,—a habit very pleasant and dreamy when coming from sweet voices, and instruments in skilled hands, but very annoying when proceeding from a band of lawless lads armed with tin horns and pans and nameless hideous sounding instruments. The present custom undoubtedly arose from a desire to avoid being a victim to this practice.

In the fourth and last place, I will say, for the benefit of the future historian, that the present custom seems to be this: To get married wherever the fancy may dictate,—at home, in the church, or at the clergyman's residence, and go immediately away on a bridal tour; and the man who should decline to spend the honeymoon at one of our large cities, or at some fashionable watering-place, would be deemed as lacking in gallantry.

During the three earlier periods, it was the habit, as it was the law, for the town-clerk to announce the bans on three successive public days. It was usually done in church; so the people had matrimony as well as religion to mingle with their Sabbath evening meditations.

A NEGRO WEDDING. The following account of a negro wedding, upon old Coit mountain, was given the writer, in boyhood, by an eye-witness: In those days all were married by the clergy. On this occasion the whole of the negro colony, comprising many families, were invited, and all the neighboring "white folks." Priest Haven, of Croydon, was invited to officiate. He made his prayer, and proceeded with the ceremony until he came to that portion which relates to the usual salutation, when he remarked that it was customary on such occasions for the officiating clergyman to salute the bride, but on that occasion he would be excused from that part of the ceremony. After the bans came an entertainment, where, added to a bountiful supply of "hog and hominy," were all the nice "fixin's" which the prolific genius of the sable bride could invent. It was arranged that the evening should close with a dance: but here was a dilemma. The musician on whom they depended had disappointed them. In this emergency the clergyman, animated, maybe, partly by a desire to make amends for his failure to perform the whole ceremony, or, perhaps, by the recollection of that portion of scripture which says, "There is a time to dance," being an accomplished musician, stepped forward and took the viol, when all went merry as a marriage bell. At the close, the sable groom very coolly remarked that it was customary at weddings for the bridegroom to pay the officiating clergyman a crown, but he would be excused on that occasion from that part of the ceremony. The wit of Sambo was received with a hearty laugh, at the clergyman's expense. He never afterwards saluted a bride.

CHAPTER XXX.

AMUSEMENTS.

AMONG the more prominent amusements, especially with the gayer and less serious portions of the inhabitants, is dancing. The frequent assemblies, balls, and plain dances of former times, and the dedication, anniversary, and other balls, and especially the Masonic anniversaries of modern times, when the choicest music is employed, and most elaborate toilets made, have been occasions of much interest. As long ago as 1823, a ball at the Eagle hotel, with Abraham Pushee, of Lebanon, the favorite master, at the viol, and Mrs. Silver as caterer, was considered the perfection of an "elegant time." The cotillon was for several years the favorite dance. Waltzing was considered by outsiders, for some time after its introduction, as an "absurd practice."

Checkers has always been a favorite game. Fox and geese was more played formerly than now. Wrestling was one of the earliest, and an exciting game, and was indulged in at raisings, election days, and all similar gatherings, the champion always feeling himself the hero. Quoits and round ball (somewhat similar to the present game of base ball) were among the earliest games, and are still in vogue, while ten-pins, billiards, and croquet are of more recent introduction.

The royal game of goose was introduced here by Gov. Ralph Metcalf, on his return from Washington, D. C., where it had been a fashionable game. Chess was introduced by Dr. W. W. Leavitt, about the year 1855. To James Cushing, a merchant, who came here in 1835, we are indebted for the introduction of backgammon.

Among the younger classes, Copenhagen, button, hunt the slipper, blind man's buff, and the grace-hoop have been the prevailing games.

Cards have been more or less indulged in. They were for some time held in disrespect, as tending to gambling and other vices, from the circumstance that card-playing was most practised at taverns and stores after business hours, when money was sometimes staked, and when the loser in the game was expected to pay the grog bill. In later years, whist and euchre are the games which have been most in vogue. A euchre circle, known at the time as the "Coit family," was formed in 1858, including among its members a large share of the younger people of the village. It was an agreeable, after-tea affair, managed by the ladies, and gave much apparent satisfaction to all its members.

The squirrel hunt, in which the parties, pitted against each other, slaughtered all the wild game of the forests, after which they met, counted their game, and partook of a supper, the losing side paying the bill, is one of the recreations which have often been pursued, and which is pardonable only when wild game is so plenty as to annoy the inhabitants by destroying their crops.

The agricultural portion of the people have had social times peculiar to themselves, among which were huskings, in which the people came together of an evening and husked out a neighbor's corn, in which both sexes joined, after which they would indulge in a supper and a social chat. On these occasions the finder of a red ear of corn was entitled to a pawn. If the finder chanced to be a young lady, there was sometimes a controversy among the beaux in regard to who should cancel the obligations. Raisings were also occasions on which all the neighbors came together for social enjoyment. Log-rolling, in which the neighboring men all joined in piling up the massive logs which covered our forests, for burning, was another occasion of social enjoyment in the earlier days. Quiltings—occasions when the women met in the afternoon and did the work, and the men came in the evening for a supper and a social time—were formerly much in vogue. Apple-parings, in which the neighbors came together and prepared apples for sauce or drying for the winter, were still another.

MAMMOTH COD ASSOCIATION. Among the many institutions which have enjoyed their day of popularity in Newport, we may reckon the Mammoth Cod Association, established in 1854. As its principles commended themselves to the tastes of men of all parties, it had many friends and no enemies. The annual suppers were occasions of great interest. The tables were loaded with every kind of fish, from the savory oyster to the largest cod, served up in all the most approved styles. One dish was invariably there;—in the middle of the table was a baked mammoth cod, and the largest the market could afford. After the cloth was removed, speeches were made, toasts were drunk, and songs were sung. At different gatherings original poems were written by Matthew Harvey, Charles H. Bartlett, and George S. Barton. The occasions were always graced by the presence of the ladies. To Henry E. Baldwin, Esq., belongs the honor of having originated this institution, so full of social enjoyment.

STORIES.

THE following story is related of an old resident of this town by the name of Hall. He was a champion storyteller, always brimful of fun and anecdote, and who, as is the case with too many men of large hearts and generous impulses, had a weakness for what in those days were called "flip" and "eggnog." One day this man, having some important business on hand, started on foot early in the morning for Claremont; but when he had proceeded as far as the Richards tavern, then in the western part of this town, he met a crowd of jolly companions, who besought him, while warming his hands and taking his flip, to tell them a story. As usual, when once in, he kept the crowd in one continual roar of laughter,—in return for which they kept his mug bountifully replenished. Before he was aware, the hours had passed unheeded by, and it was evening; and he gave up his journey and returned home. The next day he renewed the attempt, but with no better success than before. He met the same crowd, fell into the same temptation, spent the day, and returned home with his mission unfulfilled.

On the third morning, after receiving some very decided admonitions from his better half, he crooked his elbow, and started, with a most unflinching determination that on that day, at least, no allurements, however enticing, should divert him from the path of duty. On his way he encountered for the third time the same crowd, who, if possible, were still more urgent in their entreaties than before; but this time, seeming not to hear them, he marched straight by, with his eyes steadily fixed upon the path before him. But when some twenty rods past the house, and the crowd had despaired of inducing him to come in, he stopped suddenly, and, clapping his hands, exclaimed, "Well done, old Resolution! you have done nobly! Now go back, and I'll treat you!" So saying, he marched back, took his mug of flip, and then went successfully and grandly on to the end of his journey.

SCRIBNER'S DOCK. In the earlier days, a deep, sluggish stream crossed the road in the village between the river and the corner south, over which was a bridge. One day a man by the name of Scribner, disobeying the command, "Tarry not at the wine-cup," got on too liberal a horn of those choice liquors then so common at all the stores and taverns, and while attempting to pass this bridge lost his balance, and, tumbling backwards head-foremost into the stream, stuck in the soft, muddy bottom. He was rescued, but was so wet, so disguised with liquor, and so covered with black mud from head to foot, that he presented a most ludicrous appearance. Ever after, until the stream was turned away and its channel filled up, the place was known as Scribner's Dock.

Among the eccentric geniuses who have from time to time resided in town, was a man by the name of Kempton,—Jo, as he was familiarly called,—who delighted in saying and doing half-serious waggish things. He was once employed by Dea. Asa Hurd, a man of piety, and whose prayers indicated him to be a firm believer in the rigid theology of his day. One day, while at work together, Jo said to him, "Deacon, I don't like your prayers." When asked for his reasons, he said, "You don't talk right about the people. You run 'em down too much. You call 'em depraved, corrupt, and wicked, and make 'em out awful bad. You ought not to do so. You ought to speak well on 'em, and praise 'em, and call 'em a pretty good sort of people, rather more than middling. The Lord will be a good deal more apt to take 'em."

One of the early settlers, who lived at the junction of the Goshen and Break-neck Hill roads,—a stout, rough man, who did not naturally appreciate the obligations and courtesies which should exist between husband and wife, and upon which so much of the mutual happiness of each depends,—became so overbearing and cruel that the neighbors felt that something must be done. They resorted to this expedient: they all agreed to treat him to a ride on a rail. One of their number, befriending him, told him what they were going to do, and the reasons why. When the hour approached, he fled to the woods, and took refuge upon the top of a flat rock upon the mountain east of his dwelling. He had not been there long when a large black bear, as if commissioned by Providence to assist them in the good work, raised himself on his hind legs, placed his huge fore paws upon the rock near him and gave a fierce growl, which so frightened the poor sinner that he rushed screaming towards his house, where, after recovering his breath, he begged pardon of all his neighbors, and was ever after a kinder and better husband.

Similar expedients, since his day, have produced like happy results.

RODNEY RUSSELL was an eccentric genius, and when he had imbibed too freely was not always over-scrupulous in regard to his conduct. As was his habit for six or eight months in the year, he would hire himself out to our farmers, and was the most faithful and obliging of help; at the end of which he would take his money and go to the village, and give himself up to a good time, during which he was up to all manner of pranks. One of his favorite games was to mislead people. As a specimen: One day, while at Claremont, he heard a man inquiring for black sheep. Russell told him there was a lady at Northville, in this town, who had three or four, which she would be glad to sell. The man was very much pleased, and the next day harnessed up, and, taking a hand with him, travelled some ten miles for his sheep, but on his arrival was very much chagrined to learn that the lady was never the owner of a sheep. A few months after, Mr. R. received word from Claremont that his mother, who resided there, was dead, and the funeral was to be the next day at ten o'clock. Taking it in good faith, he procured a team, dressed himself in his best, and, putting a weed on his hat, went to the east part of the town to get his sister; and they wended their way, with sorrowing hearts, to the funeral. When they arrived, to their surprise, they found their mother sitting at the window, knitting, entirely innocent of any knowledge of her death or funeral. After dinner he returned home, feeling that the amount he had invested in black sheep had been returned to him, principal and interest.

At one time, hearing a boy inquiring for a pack of cards, he referred him to a store kept by one of our most exemplary Baptist deacons, telling him he was odd, and might say he did not keep them, but to persevere, and he would get the cards. The deacon, with his store full of customers, including the clergyman and several members of his church, was greatly annoyed by the persistent young man, who affirmed that he knew he kept them. He was obliged to tell him he must stop, or leave the store.

At another time he hired a young man from Vermont to teach school at Kelleyville. He told him he was to board with Col. Perry, and to take the wood for the school-house from his shed; and also told him the colonel was an odd stick, and might order him off, but he must go right along, and not mind him. He went there, as directed, unloaded his baggage, and took the wood and started the fire. After breakfast, he went up and staid until noon, with no appearance of scholars. After dinner, he began to listen to what was said to him, concluded he had been humbugged, offered to pay his bills, and departed for home.

A stranger passing through town called at the store of James Breck to inquire the way. Samuel Noyes, a waggish man who was in the crowd, gave him the direction, asking at the same time if the stranger had heard the news,—to which he replied in the negative, asking what it might be. Mr. Noyes replied, "The devil is dead." To which the stranger, in apparent astonishment, exclaimed, "Ah! oh!" Then deliberately taking out his purse, he handed Mr. Noyes a shilling piece, quietly remarking, as he rode away, "I always pitied poor fatherless children."

A miserly man, who was denying himself all the luxuries and many of the comforts of life, and even oppressing the poor that he might hoard up his gains, was once boasting, in the presence of a crowd, of his accumulations. After a pause in his boasting, Dea. Jonathan Cutting, who happened to be present, quietly remarked, "Friend, I think you are foolish to hoard up so. You ought to be good to the poor, and enjoy a part of it as you go along. You can't carry it with you into the other world, and if you could I am afraid it would melt."

We record the following for the sake of the moral: A clergyman, eminent for his usual good judgment, was about to meddle with a quarrel in his choir. A lawyer friend of his admonished him of the dangers in his pathway, to which the clergyman replied, "Let me interfere to make peace, won't you?" The lawyer replied, "Let me relate a fable: An honest sheep, distressed at the bloody noses of two rams who were having a fierce encounter, sought to make peace by placing her head between the belligerents. The poor creature found by the act, not reconciliation between them, but her own brains crushed out." The clergyman's interference resulted in a speedy resignation of his pastorate. Moral: Meddle not with other people's quarrels.

The following was often repeated of one of the jolly old fellows who used to resort to the "old brick store," where the evening would be spent in drinking flip, smoking, and telling stories. The merchant had been boasting of the fine quality of his powder. He said to the large crowd which surrounded him, "I can vouch for that, gentlemen, for I was sitting here one evening with others, when one of the company, in lighting his pipe, accidentally dropped a live coal into an open keg. I saw it drop, and caught a pail, and put for the river at my biggest gait; but if you'll believe it, when I got back, that powder was more'n half burned up!"

While Joseph Hutchinson, a lad, son of Rev. Elisha Hutchinson, was lying on his death-bed, feeling that his earthly pilgrimage was nearly at an end, he desired a last season of prayer and communion with his fellow-Christians. Many doubts were felt whether it would be prudent in his very low condition. But his solicitations were so urgent that a meeting was at length appointed. At an early hour the room was filled with sympathizing friends. All were subdued in the presence of the dying boy. A deep, indescribable solemnity pervaded all hearts, was visible on every face, in every remark, and was manifest in every prayer. The Holy Spirit seemed indeed present, giving unction to all that was done and said. Near the close of the meeting, so full of deep interest and tender feeling, there was a pause. All hearts seemed flooded with emotion too deep for utterance. During this interval young Hutchinson, recovering his strength and rising from his couch, with a countenance pale as in death, with only a sheet wrapped about him, stepped forward to the door. Extending both hands, and gazing upward, the vail seemed to be drawn aside, and he stood looking upon the glories of the other world. Turning from these scenes with a countenance radiant with inspiration, he addressed his companions with an eloquence and a pathos which, heightened by his ghost-like form and snowy apparel, made him seem like a celestial visitant, and produced an effect upon the company which could be felt, but which no tongue or pen can describe. All eyes were bathed in tears, all hearts were melted. At the close, turning upward his wild, lustrous eyes, he exclaimed, "Loved ones, farewell! The angels are waiting. Meet me in heaven." Then falling back into his father's arms, he was carried to his bed, whence, lingering yet a little while, he was called home. The spirit of that meeting soon spread throughout the town, and was followed by one of the most precious revival seasons Newport has ever witnessed, during which hundreds were added to the church, including all those who were present at the meeting.

CHAPTER XXXII.

CASUALTIES.

IN 1771, a daughter of Samuel Hurd, aged 10 years, was killed by the falling of a tree near the old South church. The tree had been girdled, instead of felled, as was much the practice with the earliest settlers.

June 26, 1793, Charles Seamans, aged 19 years, a son of the Rev. Job Seamans, of New London, fell from the plate while assisting at the raising of the old meeting-house, which stood at the foot of Claremont hill, and was so badly injured that he survived but a few hours.

July 10, 1799, Enoch Whittier, a lad of 10 years, was drowned in the Goshen Branch of Sugar river, east of the residence of the late T. J. Eastman.

A son of Ebenezer Merritt, one of the first settlers, fell from his cart, at Northville, and broke his neck.

Asa Kelsey, son of Ensign Kelsey, was killed by falling from the frame at the raising of the house at the P. Whitcomb place.

Mary Corbin, a daughter of Dr. James Corbin, had her skull broken by the kick of a horse. By a successful trepanning, she recovered, and lived to an advanced age.

May 7, 1801, a daughter of Jesse Lane, one of the earliest settlers, while crossing a foot-bridge on her father's farm, at the A. Pease place, fell into the river and was drowned.

Dr. Prentice, of Springfield, a surgeon in the 31st Regiment, while returning home from a muster at the village, was thrown from his horse near the Daniel Wilmarth house, and so injured that he died in a few hours.

In 1801, Edward Stevens and family, of this town, were lost at sea, while on their passage between Savannah and New York.

A log rolled over Jonathan Haven with such weight as to cause the blood to flow from his mouth, nose, and ears. It was thought the injury must prove fatal, but he soon recovered.

Charles J. Colby descended into the well at the house next north of the new town hall, for the purpose of cleaning it out. While there, the wall caved suddenly in, and buried him. The stones, however, caught and wedged in before reaching quite to the bottom, and left him in the space below. With great effort, continuing several hours, he was rescued alive, but survived only a short time. He said that while there he could hear distinctly all the conversation of those above; that his heart sunk within him when they thought of giving up his release alive as a hopeless job, and leaped with joy as they resumed their labors.

George, son of Azotes Chamberlin, was instantly killed, while passing on the highway where men were blasting rocks, by a piece of the falling rock.

In 1825, Wealthy Jane, a little daughter of Capt. John Russ, aged 4 years, came to her death by a bean lodging in her wind-pipe.

July 15, 1826, Jonathan, son of David Cutting, aged 7 years, while fishing in the pond near the Newport mill, fell in and was drowned.

March 9, 1832, three little lads, two of them sons of William Mitchell, the tanner, and one the son of Nathan Taylor, while at play with their sleds, accidentally slid into the canal, near the Scribner mill, and were all drowned.

John W., son of Samuel F. Chellis, while at work in the bobbin-shop at the Diamond mill, was caught in the machinery and carried several times around by the shafting. His clothes were torn from his body, and he was badly but not fatally injured.

Owen, a son of Stephen Hurd, who lived on the S. Howe place, in the south-west part of the town, came to his death in this wise: On the 9th of March, 1829, he and his father had been out with the neighbors breaking roads, and were returning with a load of wood. While the father was busy behind, talking with the neighbors, the boy ran forward and jumped upon the sled, and, unnoticed by the father, accidentally slid off in front, and the sled ran upon him. The team soon stopped, and, upon search, the missing boy was found doubled up under the sled, and crushed to death in the most horrible manner.

Asa Kelsey, of Croydon, was killed in this town, in 1834, by the fall of a timber while at a raising.

Joel, son of Samuel Wright, while washing sheep at Kelleyville, ventured too far from the shore, and, being unable to swim, was drowned.

Ora B., son of Ichabod Morse, was killed by the kick of a horse.

Dec. 2, 1850, Stephen Parker, Esq., aged 60 years, fell from a staging, near the Granite mill, upon the frozen ground, with such force as to fracture the skull, a portion of the brain protruding. He survived but a short time.

On the 4th of July, 1851, Sylvester, son of Maj. David Harris, in the employ of the Western Railroad, lost his life while standing upon the cars, decorating them with flags. His head came in contact with a bridge, killing him instantly.

July 5, 1852, Chester Averill, while in the act of mounting his loaded stage, at Bradford, fell directly before the coach, and the wheels passed over his body. His injuries were thought to be fatal. Subsequently, in 1876, while at East Lebanon, fishing, he slipped from a log and broke his hip, and died a few days afterwards.

Abel Howe was thrown from his wagon and fatally injured at Randall's mill in 1855. The horse became frightened, and ran over a log in the yard, and threw him out.

In May, 1853, David B., son of David S. Newell, while on his way home from Georgia, was on board the train at the time of the terrible railroad disaster at Norwalk, Conn., and was one of the victims of that horrid catastrophe, being killed instantly, aged 22 years.

May 16, 1855, George E. Wilcox, son of Dea. Joseph, fell from the foretop of the ship Mary Robinson, near Liverpool, a distance of some fifty feet, into the sea, and was drowned. The accident occurred by the breaking of a rope upon which he was standing to make repairs.

In November, 1857, a child of Henry Davis, aged 5 years, while in the field with his father, stepped into a pool of water and was drowned.

In April, 1858, a son of Chester Walker, aged 5 years, tipped a grindstone over upon himself, which caused his death.

In 1860, while George Cutting was loading his threshing-machine, one of the skids gave way, letting the whole weight of the machine upon him, crushing him. He survived but a short time.

In July, 1861, a son of Dexter Richards, aged 9 months, was scalded to death by pulling a pot of hot tea upon himself.

In 1871, Sylvester Warren, while grinding at Sibley's scythe shop, was instantly killed by the bursting of a grindstone. He was thrown back several feet, and remained in a sitting position.

In 1854, a grindstone belonging to B. F. Haven, Esq., weighing about one thousand pounds, burst, with a noise like a cannon, injuring a Mr. Baker, but not seriously.

In September, 1865, the stage filled with passengers, while returning from Bradford, was upset, throwing them all into a deep ditch. Some of the passengers were seriously, but none fatally, injured.

In November, 1863, while engaged in digging a ditch for an aqueduct across the land of Nathan Mudgett, for the purpose of supplying the F. W. Lewis house with water, Daniel Muzzy and Benjamin Dunham were buried alive by the caving of the quicksand of the high bank through which they were shoveling. One was covered to a depth of six feet, and the other still deeper. It was half an hour before the one was dug out, and the other was under ground for nearly an hour. They were both taken out alive, neither of them receiving any permanent injury. Three days after, "Billy" Hoben, an Irishman, after boasting somewhat roundly of his courage and ability to finish the job, was caught in the same trap, and buried still deeper. When his body was so far released as to admit of respiration, before the sand was out of his eyes, he sent up a fearful yell for "Whis-key—whis-key!" It was brought him; and between two neighbors he soon marched off in triumph.

June 1, 1863, Lavina Fitch, while riding in a boat on Lily pond, with a party, fell overboard and was drowned.

Saville M., son of Lewis Pillsbury, while jumping from a sled, was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun. The contents lodged in his head, entering at his left eye. He survived but a short time.

The doctrine that calamities always come in pairs is well illustrated in the circumstance that a few years since two young men by the name of Carr,—Isaac and Benjamin F.,—the one living on East mountain, and the other on Wilmarth mountain, nearly at the same time lost each an eye by the hook of an ox.

Carroll W. Peabody was killed in 1864, while felling a tree at the old homestead in the west part of the town.

Albert H. Sprague, Jan. 5, 1866, while returning home from the village, on foot, the night being cold and blustering, got off the road on the hill north of the school-house at Kelleyville, and was found the next morning frozen to death. His age was 56 years.

The wife of Milon Booth, while standing with her back to the stove, at her new home in California, had her clothing take fire, resulting in a most shocking and painful death.

In 1866, Capt. Zina Goldthwaite fell from his hay-loft upon the barn floor, where he was found in an insensible condition, with one hip broken, and otherwise badly injured.

In August, 1869, Miss Parmelia Bowers, a sister of S. L. Bowers, Esq., was thrown from a carriage and badly injured. While the horse was under full headway, one rein gave way, the team turned suddenly around, and upset the carriage.

Henry M., son of Joseph Chase, while at work in a mill at Manchester, was caught in a belt and thrown around the shafting, by which accident he lost his right arm.

June 3, 1869, Millard Osmer, a young man at work in the Granite mills, retired to his bed with a night-lamp and book. About twenty minutes after being left alone, with his lamp upon his breast, reading, a smoke was discovered about the house, and a noise was heard in his room. Upon entering it, a most horrid spectacle was presented. The remains of the young man were found lying upon the floor, burned in the most shocking manner. He was subject to fits, and it was supposed that he had fallen into one when his bed took fire.

In February, 1871, John Burke, an Irishman, a teamster in the employ of S. H. Edes, Esq., was thrown from his wagon, near the summit at Newbury, and was so seriously injured that death soon after resulted.

April 22, 1872, David Wilmarth, aged 72 years, was precipitated upon the floor of his barn from the scaffolding by the sliding of a ladder upon which he was descending. He was so severely injured that he died in a few days.

Willis Partridge, a native of Croydon, while at work in the Coffin & Nourse factory, was caught in a belt and severely injured.

October 4, 1872, Horace Sprague, while attempting to cross the railroad in the west part of the town, with a team, was struck by a passing engine and badly injured. One of his horses was killed.

January 25, 1873, Henry A. Wilcox, while in the basement of the village saw-mill, where he went to procure sawdust, came in contact with the saw, and had his right arm, above the elbow, severed from his body..

Geo. H. Comstock, a brakeman on the railroad, was thrown from the down train near Warner village, on the morning of April 17, 1873, and was run over by the cars and killed.

May 4, 1873, a tenement house on Elm street, belonging to S. L. Bowers, Esq., was consumed by fire. During the progress of the flames, the main chimney fell upon Charles E. Richards and George Williams, crushing them in a most shocking manner. The former was killed instantly; the latter survived but a short time. Richards was son of Sylvanus, aged 26 years. Williams was a young man from Vermont.

February 4, 1874, Willie Baker, a lad of 17 years, employed in the sash and blind factory of Dow & Baker, was caught in a belt and carried with great violence over a shaft, by which both legs and one arm were broken, and other severe injuries inflicted.

June 10, 1874, as the gravel train was passing near the trotting-park east of the village, Dominie Martin, a Frenchman, while attempting to pass from one car to another, fell between them, and was run over and so badly injured that he died in a few hours.

May 17, 1876, the body of O. B. Stearns was found on the banks of the river, near the residence of William S. Kempton.

November 14, 1876, George Ladd, son of Jeremiah, aged 17 years, was drowned in the mill-pond of L. F. Dodge. He was there for the purpose of setting traps. It was supposed he came to his death by the upsetting of his boat.

September 1, 1876, George B. Dyer, living at Kelleyville, went into the woods for a load of bark. Not returning, a messenger was sent in search of him, who found the load upset, and the lifeless remains of Mr. Dyer lying near by.

In the summer of 1877, a son of Jeremiah Ladd, while attempting to get upon a moving railroad car, was thrown under one of the wheels, by which one of his limbs was so badly crushed, that, in order to save his life, amputation was resorted to.

A Mr. Dowlin, an operative in the mills, was caught in the belting of a rapidly-revolving wheel, crushing and mangling his person in every part to such an extent as to leave hardly the semblance of the human form. He nevertheless survived, and finally recovered from the effects of the injury.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

FIRES AND LIGHTNING.

FIRES.

THE first building burned in town was the house of Benjamin Bragg, which stood upon the site occupied by the present dwelling of G. H. Fairbanks.

The house of Aaron Buell, one of the early settlers, situated near the B. W. Jenks place, was destroyed by fire.

The dwelling of Philip W. Kibby was burnt, and with it the records of the Baptist church and society.

A blacksmith shop belonging to Dea. David B. Chapin, standing on the grounds now occupied by the residence of Matthew Harvey, Esq., was consumed in 1828.

November 19, 1829, the blacksmith shop and out-buildings of Ira Wakefield, situated in the north part of the town, at the Kibby place, were destroyed.

A barn and shed belonging to Hubbard Newton, Esq., in which was stored a quantity of hay and flax, was consumed in December, 1829.

A barn filled with hay, owned by Capt. John Russ, was destroyed in 1834; accident caused by a careless smoker.

The woollen mill belonging to Messrs. Smith & Rockwell, on Sugar river, near the residence of Austin L. Fletcher, was burnt in 1835.

A woollen factory, standing on the spot now occupied by the Eagle mills, and owned by Hon. Franklin Simonds, was destroyed in 1833. This was the first woollen mill in town, and was erected by Col. James D. Walcott in 1813. It was rebuilt and occupied by Philo Fuller as a worsted mill, and was again burned in 1840.

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY

ASTOR LENOX TILDEN FOUNDATION

The New York Public Library, Astor Lenox Tilden Foundation, is a public library system in New York City. It is the largest public library system in the United States, with over 50 million volumes and 25 million serials. The library is located in the main branch at 475 Fifth Avenue, and has several other branches throughout the city. The library is open to the public, and provides a wide range of services, including lending books, periodicals, and other materials, as well as reference services, reading rooms, and special programs for children and adults. The library is a non-profit organization, and is supported by the City of New York and private donors. It is a member of the American Library Association, and is recognized as a leading institution in the field of library science.

The old Newport academy, a two-story structure, used at the time as a school-room for District No. 2 and a vestry for the Congregational church, was burned Nov. 2, 1843. It stood on the ground north of the church, now occupied by the Congregational parsonage. The fire took in the stairway leading to the upper room, where a school was being kept; and a son of Rev. John Woods, one of the scholars, came near perishing before he was rescued at a window in the opposite end of the building.

The north wing of the old Baldwin house, standing on the ground now occupied by Wheeler's block, was consumed in December, 1845.

A saw-mill owned by Dea. Jonathan Cutting, in which was also a bedstead shop, run by Nutting & Buxton, standing on the ground now occupied by the Sugar River mill, was destroyed in July, 1847. Loss, $2,000.

September 8, 1848, the scythe factory at Northville, belonging to Larned & Sibley, together with much valuable machinery and fixtures, was consumed; also, more than a hundred dozen scythes, ready for market, besides others in an unfinished state. Loss, $2,500; insurance, $1,200.

The dwelling, with its contents, owned by Erastus Huntoon, at Northville, was destroyed Nov. 27, 1850. The fire was caused by a defect in the chimney.

February 8, 1851, the dwelling of Enoch Noyes, standing at the foot of Claremont hill, together with nearly all its contents, was burned. No insurance.

February 16, 1852, the saw-mill of Oliver Comstock, in the east part of the town, was destroyed.

July 28, 1853, the dwelling of Nathan Gould, in the northwest part of the town, was burned. The family were absent.

The school-house in District No. 2 was destroyed in 1859.

In February, 1855, the cardboard factory belonging to Royal Booth, on the brook at Randall's mills, was burned. Insurance, $800.

Jan. 6, 1860, the Newport House, then owned by H. G. P. & J. H. Cross, was burned. There was a large ball at the house that evening, and the fire was supposed to have originated with some intoxicated lads from a neighboring county, who had been denied access to the hall.

In January, 1862, a fire broke out in the picker-room of the Sugar River Mills, and consumed some $800 worth of cotton and wool. The fire-proof walls and force-pump prevented the destruction of the mill.

In 1862, the house of Maximilian J. Webber caught fire, and was materially injured.

In December, 1865, the dry-house connected with the pail shop of Hial Dow, at Northville, was burned.

The tannery of Hunton & Dill, and the grist-mill, barn, and dwelling-house of C. C. Shedd, Esq., were consumed Jan. 6, 1866. A considerable portion of the contents of the buildings was saved. The loss was particularly severe upon Mr. Shedd, whose property was thus all swept away.

The barn, shed, and butchery of Oliver F. Stearns were burned in 1866.

The bridge near the residence of T. W. Gilmore, Esq., was destroyed by fire in 1867. It was thought the fire was caused by a spark dropped from the pipe of a careless traveller. Loss,—$1,500.

In January, 1867, a dwelling-house owned by Stephen Call, near the village cemetery, was burned.

The most destructive fire that has ever happened in town was on the night of Nov. 1, 1867. It took in some shavings in the rear of the Sugar River House, then owned by G. L. Cass, and consumed the hotel, barn, and buildings attached, the store of Whitney & Sibley at the south, and the dwelling-house and all the out-buildings of Ethan S. Chase at the north. It was thought to be the work of an incendiary. These buildings occupied the ground on which now stand the Whitney store, Phenix hotel, Woodbury's block, and the Dudley building. Insurance, Whitney & Sibley, $500; Cass, $3,100; Chase, $2,000.

In November, 1867, a barn belonging to W. D. Barrett, at Northville, was burned.

In 1868, the house and all the buildings owned by Chester Dodge, and occupied by Seth Chellis, Esq., in the north part of the village, were destroyed.

Feb. 16, 1870, the barn of Timothy Herrick was burned. Loss, $350; insurance, $100.

Nov. 19, 1870, a cottage house belonging to Solomon Dean, Esq., standing near the school-house in District No. 14, was destroyed. Loss, $1,200; insurance, $800.

Jan. 26, 1872, the dwelling-house, together with its contents, belonging to Richard H. Thompson, Jr., at the Sears place on the Unity road, was destroyed. The family were away for an afternoon visit, and returned to find their home in ashes. Loss, $1,000; no insurance.

Nov. 11, 1872, the Newport Mills, owned by Abiathar Richards, were burned. The fire took in the picker, which was on the second floor. Mr. E. A. Whipple, foreman of the mill, who was present, said the entire mass of material passing through the machine and lying about it apparently ignited in a moment, and baffled all his efforts to stay its progress. It was a three-story building, originally erected and used as an oil-mill. Insurance, $15,000.

Sept. 24, 1873, the house and barn belonging to Edward Stevens, situated in the south part of the village, were destroyed by fire. The residence was new. Insured, $2,000.

Dec. 24, 1872, a barn belonging to Mr. William Kempton was destroyed, with forty tons of hay and nineteen head of cattle. No insurance.

June 20, 1873, two barns, owned by Orrin C. & William B. Kibby, in the north part of the town, were destroyed by fire, together with four hogs and a lot of farming tools. Loss, $2,000; insured for $500.

About two o'clock on the morning of Nov. 14, 1873, fire was discovered in a livery stable occupied by Milton S. Jackson, which was destroyed, with six horses and a large quantity of hay, grain, etc., together with a building owned by Benjamin M. Gilmore, and used by him in the manufacture of coffins; and an ell connected with the Eagle block, and owned by S. H. Edes. The stable belonged to S. L. Bowers. Total loss estimated at $7,000; partially insured.

March 17, 1874, the house of Lucius Lathrop, on the Sunapee road, was destroyed. Insured, $2,000.

In 1875, two barns belonging to the same were burned.

On the 25th of March, 1874, the rake and handle manufactory of Leander F. Dodge, on Oak street, was consumed. Loss, $2,000.

A dwelling-house belonging to the estate of Leonard Lawton, on Summer street, near the school-house in District No. 14, was burned.

In 1876, a fire caught in the picker-room of the flannel mill of S. H. Edes. The room being fire-proof, the fire was extinguished. Damage, $200.

May, 1874, the house of S. F. and A. W. Clark, on Laurel street, caught fire. The prompt appearance of both engines and nearly the whole village, soon extinguished the flames. The building was seriously damaged, both by fire and flood. Insured.

About three o'clock on the morning of July 20, 1875, the house, ell, and stable of A. P. Wellcome, on the Croydon road, were destroyed by fire. Insurance, $6,000.

May 19, 1877, the house, and all the out-buildings and contents, belonging to Elon Cutting, on the Unity road, at the M. Hurd place, were destroyed. The loss was $5,000; insurance, $3,000.

In November, 1877, the barns and sheds, with hay and a stable filled with cattle, owned by Shepherd H. Cutting, and situated in the west part of the town, were destroyed by fire. It was supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

In 1878, the buildings owned by B. C. & H. N. Pike, at the J. E. Reed place, on Pike hill, were destroyed.

In August, 1878, a shed filled with wood, belonging to the Concord & Claremont Railroad, was burned.

September 21, 1878, the village saw-mill, all its machinery and much lumber, two dwellings, an ell and a barn, belonging to the estate of Daniel Nettleton, a large wooden structure belonging to L. Whittemore and E. E. Stearns, in which were machinery, lumber, and a large quantity of rakes belonging to Alexander & Perkins, and the dwelling and barn of John Flanagan,—all situated in a group between the railroad and river,—were destroyed. The railroad bridge was damaged; grain, hay, and live stock were lost. The Nettleton property was insured for $2,500; Alexander & Perkins, rake- and handle-makers, for $500; Lorenzo Whittemore, sash- and blind-maker, for $1,500; John Flanagan, for $1,200; E. E. Stearns, for $1,000.

LIGHTNING.

The barn of Dea. Jeremiah Nettleton, at the H. Hanson place, was struck by lightning in the summer of 1814. His son and a son of Philip W. Kibby were in it at play at the time. His son was struck on the head by a portion of the timber thrown off by the lightning, which fractured his skull. When taken up he was thought to be dead, but soon revived. The crushed portions of the skull were removed, and his life was prolonged to an advanced age. The lightning, striking the Kibby boy on the back of his head, passed down the whole length of his body and limbs, inflicting a severe injury, from which he was a long time in recovering. He fell, when struck, directly under the eaves of the barn, from which the water poured in torrents upon him, and which was thought to have been the means of saving his life. The new tow frock and trowsers which he wore were literally torn into shreds, and lay at his feet.

The barn belonging to the residence of M. J. Webber, occupied by Brooks C. Flanders, was struck by lightning on the 5th of July, 1842, and considerably injured. A hen and her brood, sitting at the foot of the post down which the fluid passed, were found undisturbed, but with life extinguished.

August 11, 1842, a cow owned by Cyril Wheeler was killed by lightning.

June 28, 1843, Charles Comstock had a fine pair of oxen killed by lightning.

On the 30th of July, 1846, the dwelling of Orange Whitney was struck by lightning. It hit two chimneys situated near each end of the house. From one it passed down a post, tearing off a coffee-mill attached to it. Mrs. W., who stood only a few feet from the post, was made senseless by the shock, but soon recovered.

In June, 1848, the lightning struck the dwelling of Gov. Ralph Metcalf, now occupied by William Duntun, throwing the laths and plastering all over the nursery, which Mrs. M. and her two children had left but a moment before. Passing to the lower story, a portion of the fluid followed the bell-wire, but, avoiding the glass door-knob, passed unceremoniously out at the front door, taking the panels with it.

October 21, 1851, the dwelling of Bela N. Chamberlin, standing on the spot now occupied by the Phenix hotel, was struck, but received slight damage.

The barn of Calvin Thatcher, on Thatcher hill, was struck by lightning, Oct. 19, 1852, and three of his cattle were killed.

In September, 1862, Davis B. Robinson had a valuable yoke of oxen killed by the electric fluid.

During a shower, Oct. 10, 1872, the bridge across the Goshen Branch of Sugar river, on Elm street, was struck by lightning. The damage was slight.

The lightning struck the house of the Rev. Paul S. Adams during a severe shower, July 23, 1872, but passed down the rod, doing but slight damage.

During a terrific thunder-storm in the summer of 1876, a lightning-ball went into the chamber window of the house of S. F. Lund, at the south end of the village, and when within about a foot of the chamber floor, it exploded, doing no damage whatever. Mrs. Gleason, who was in the room at the time, saw the ball when it came in at the window, and was not more than four feet from it at the time of the explosion. During the same shower, a streak of lightning passed down one of the rods on the house of Dr. J. L. Swett, passing off on the granite underpinning into the cellar, but doing no particular damage.

July 17, 1877, the barn of Henry J. Hurd, at Northville, was struck by lightning, splitting five posts and tearing off shingles and boards. No marks of fire were seen, though there was hay in the barn.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

AGRICULTURE.

FARMERS' AND MECHANICS' ASSOCIATION. This association was organized Sept. 26, 1874. Its object is the promotion of agriculture and the mechanic arts. George E. Dame was chosen president; Charles A. Silsby, Augustus Trask, and Benjamin F. Carr, vice-presidents; Henry A. Jenks, treasurer; E. R. Miller, Secretary; Dexter Richards, Geo. E. Dame, F. W. Lewis, W. A. Perry, and Samuel K. Wright, directors. The officers since have been,—

Presidents—Geo. E. Dame, 1876; Charles A. Silsby, 1877, 1878.

Vice-Presidents—G. F. Whitney, 2d, Simon A. Tenney, Augustus Wylie, 1876; G. F. Whitney, 2d, Augustus Wylie, S. A. Tenney, 1877; G. H. Towle, Augustus Wylie, B. F. Carr, 1878.

Secretaries—E. M. Kempton, 1876, 1877; Simon A. Tenney, 1878.

Treasurers—Henry A. Jenks, 1876, 1877; Perley S. Coffin, 1878.

Managers—Mark Gove, W. H. Perry, G. H. Towle, B. F. Carr, S. H. Cutting, 1876, 1877; E. M. Kempton, O. Parker, O. C. Kibby, Freeman Cutting, and Samuel P. Wright, 1878.

During the autumn and winter this association has had frequent meetings for the discussion of farm topics, which have been well attended and full of interest.

The first annual town fair was held Sept. 30, 1875, under the auspices of this society. It was an occasion of much interest. Some 117 yokes of oxen were present, nearly all of which were joined in one team and driven through the village streets, escorted by the Newport Cornet Band and the fire companies. The display of stock and the various agricultural products was very extensive, and the display of fancy work in the ladies' department was elaborate and beautiful. In all the departments the exhibition was most flattering. Each year since, the town has held its annual fair under the direction of this association, with a like success, all indicating a most commendable interest in agriculture on the part of our citizens.

The speakers at the different fairs have been,—Geo. E. Jenks, Esq., of Concord, and Hon. L. P. Cooper, of Croydon, 1876; Gen. Luther McCutchins, of New London, James O. Adams, Esq., of Manchester, and Hon. Moses Humphrey, of Concord, 1877; Hon. John D. Lyman and Hon. L. P. Cooper, 1878.

Marshals—J. B. Cooper, G. F. Whitney, 2d, S. M. Richards, S. H. Cutting, W. H. Perry.

In 1878, Freeman Cutting had on exhibition ninety-four head of cattle, besides a large number of fat hogs and colts, and S. H. Edes, Esq., had a nice herd of thorough-bred Ayrshires. At this fair it was estimated that more than 4,000 persons were present.

The Sullivan County Agricultural Society held an annual fair in this town Oct. 1, 1851. The day was fine, and the fair in all respects was a success. A Devon bull, owned by P. & M. Humphrey and E. H. Brown, of Croydon, weighing a ton, and two Ayrshire cows, by H. Bingham, of Unity, were among the objects of greatest interest, both, then, comparatively rare breeds of stock in this section of the country. An able address was delivered on the occasion by the Rev. John Woods, a practical farmer as well as preacher.

The Sullivan Grange, No. 8, Patrons of Husbandry, was organized in Newport, Nov. 7, 1873, by Edwin Thompson, Deputy of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, with twenty-seven charter members, which has been increased to sixty members, its present number. Its officers, in 1874 and 1875, were,—Master, Isaac A. Reed; Secretary, Simon A. Tenney;—in 1876 and 1877, Master, Simon A. Tenney; Secretary, Lorenzo L. Cutts;—in 1878, Master, Frederick L. Little; Secretary, Charles A. Silsby.

The following farm statistics have been gathered from various sources :

Year.	Horses.	Cattle.	Sheep.	Stock in trade.	Money at interest.
1794	72	703
1802	287	1125		$760	$410
1825	333	1852	792	12,150	5,400
1850	373	2066	2753	15,450	40,632
1876 1877	486	1479	1356	76,820	111,613

In 1870, the census showed 18,533 acres of improved land, 317 horses, 1,843 cattle, 1,372 sheep, 371 swine; value of live-stock, $137,501. Total amount of farm products, as given by the U. S. census, $148,156;—wheat, 856 bushels; rye, 398; corn, 10,807; barley, 14,520; wool, 8,140 pounds; beans, 322 bushels; potatoes, 30,170; apples, $7,299 worth; butter, 67,979 pounds; cheese, 11,326; milk, 10,880 quarts; hay, 4,998 tons; maple sugar, 33,290 pounds; value of slaughtered animals, $26,294.

In 1872 the number of polls was 636; valuation, $1,711,668; stock in trade, $70,650; stocks and money at interest, $95,604; saving bank deposits, $118,282; town debt, $100,060.

In 1876, the selectmen reported as follows: The town has produced 3,940 tons of hay; 29,600 bushels of potatoes; 7,690 bushels of shelled corn; 650 bushels of wheat; 12,940 bushels of oats; 290 bushels of rye; 2,200 bushels of barley; 790 bushels of India and buckwheat; 245 bushels of pease and beans; 63,635 quarts of milk sold or used as milk; 64,475 pounds of butter; 30,000 dozen eggs; 34,000 pounds of poultry; 73,750 pounds of maple sugar; 5,800 pounds of wool.

In 1878, the selectmen report,—Whole inventory of the town, $1,196,440; increase over the year previous, $27,485; per cent. of taxation, $1.82; highway tax, 17 cents on $100; number of horses, 496; cattle, 1,448; sheep, 1,458; hogs, 421; dogs, 166.

The New Hampshire Board of Agriculture has held several sessions in this town, which have been full of interest, and have been very profitable to the agricultural portion of the community.

Capt. Joel Nettleton kept a full-blooded Durham bull in 1827 for the improvement of stock.

Paul J. Wheeler in 1860 raised an Alderney calf which at six months old weighed 600 pounds, which he sold to the Enfield Shakers for $100.

John Endicott took the first premium at the state fair in 1854 for the best fat ox. It was four years old, and weighed 2,590 pounds.

William H. Sprague slaughtered a hog in 1863 which weighed 714 pounds; Emerson & Booth one in 1855, which weighed 825 pounds; and Britton & Wiggin one in 1877, which weighed, after being dressed, 1,025 pounds.

James Baker, in 1868, produced and sold 1,407 dozen eggs,—kept 160 hens.

Wm. F. Newton, Esq., in one year produced and sold 100 bushels of strawberries. Other parties have since engaged in the business.

CHAPTER XXXV.

SPORTING

THE first settlers in town, coming from the region bordering on Long Island Sound, were accustomed to all kinds of fishing sports, and felt the loss of them here. As a substitute, they were accustomed, after the planting season was over, to go down to Bellows Falls and spend several days in a general good time, catching shad and salmon, which in those days, before the dams were built across the river below, used to come up thus far in great abundance. This season of sport and recreation was always looked forward to with great interest by the young men and boys. Sugar river and its tributaries have always furnished an ample field for those sportsmen who are seeking trout and the other varieties of the smaller fish. The interest in this direction has been greatly augmented by the introduction of the black bass by our fish commissioners.

The Newport Fishing Club was organized in 1871. They erected a house on Big island, in Sunapee lake, in 1874, where they established their head-quarters, and to which they, their ladies and guests, make frequent excursions during the summer months, spending time in fishing, boat-riding, and social enjoyment.

Soon after the war a party of young men took their teams, camp equipage, and a reporter for the press, and spent several weeks among the mountains and lakes in the north part of the state, hunting and fishing.

In May, 1827, an eagle was captured on the meadows, which measured from tip to tip some six feet. A quill from one of its wings was manufactured into a pen, with which the editor of the Spectator recorded the incident, and which he declared imparted a special inspiration to his editorials. In May, 1829, Capt. Oliver Lund shot a very large eagle upon the meadows, but as no quill reached the editor, only a terse account of it was given. Among all the game which has abounded in our forests, the partridge and the pigeon have been the most hunted and the most enjoyed.

The deer, a valuable game, was much hunted and enjoyed in the earlier days. The rabbit and gray squirrel have always been plenty, and their meat has been among the luxuries. So late as the winter of 1827 a deer was discovered and shot in our village.

In the earlier days bears were comparatively numerous, and often captured. The wife of John Wilmarth, who lived near the Griffin place, sent John Moore, a lad living in the family, to a thicket of hemlocks to procure boughs for a broom. He soon came running back, declaring that a big bear was down there. Mrs. Wilmarth went to the barn and notified her husband, who, taking his gun, ran to explore the region. He found that the boy had walked up a large tree which had been blown nearly down, for the purpose of picking the boughs, and that Bruin had walked out directly under his feet. The neighbors were aroused and gave chase. The animal was overtaken and captured near the M. Hurd place.

A bear was caught on Coit mountain in 1867. It was first seen by Mr. Geo. Humphrey, of Croydon, crossing the road between the flat and the village. A dog was set upon his track, and soon drove him into a tree. Several men, by climbing into neighboring trees, were enabled to throw ropes around his neck, which so strangled the animal that they were able to bind him and carry him down to the residence of Mr. Goldthwaite, where he was kept for some time on exhibition.

The people of this town have several times joined with citizens of other towns in grand bear hunts. In April, 1827, the people of this and all the towns around Sunapee mountain joined in a hunt. They formed a circle around the entire base of the mountain. The signal horn was sounded for starting, and continued around the whole circle, which signal was repeated every half hour until their arrival at the top. A like hunt on Croydon mountain shortly after was not more successful. In both cases nothing but small game was captured.

Dea. Phineas Chapin was a tithing-man of the town, and performed his official functions with such strictness as to forbid young men travelling to visit their sweethearts on Sunday. He was himself on one occasion overtaken by an embarrassing temptation, which exemplifies the rule that the good are often the most tempted. One Sunday he discovered a large black bear sitting upon its haunches in his cornfield, picking and eating the ears of corn. The deacon, either forgetting, through the excitement of the occasion, his official character, or remembering those passages of scripture which teach the lawfulness of doing good on the Sabbath, and that "if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel" (we leave the reader to judge which), seized his favorite gun, and with deliberate aim sent a bullet through the bear's heart. He thus not only saved his corn, but the meat and skin of the bear materially added to the family supplies.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

INDIANS, IRISH, FRENCH, AND NEGROES.

INDIANS. Newport has but little of Indian history. No Indians occupied or claimed the territory at the time or since the first settlement; and few are the traces which have been discovered indicating that this has ever been much their home or hunting-ground. It has been a conjecture, the truth or falsity of which can never be known, that Eastman, the daring and adventurous trapper, the first white man that explored the beautiful meadows of Newport, was waylaid and killed by the Indians, who were jealous of any infringement upon their hunting- and fishing-grounds. After the French and Indian War, a few lingered in the valley of the Connecticut and around the shores of Sunapee lake, but none here.

Tradition says the early settlers here experienced one alarm, only, from this source. The Indians had been showing signs of a spirit of hostility. They had been attacking and committing depredations upon other towns, carrying away much booty and many prisoners, the rumor of which had reached this town, and filled the hearts of the settlers with alarm. In the midst of this state of feeling, which may have magnified the danger, a band of Indians was seen lurking about the forests. The people were greatly frightened, expecting an immediate attack. The men flew to arms, and gave them chase. The Indians fled by way of the Aiken hill, and, eluding the vigilance of the pursuit, which continued all day, were never overtaken. Meanwhile the women, for safety, had fled in all directions, and had sought all manner of hiding-places, where they remained concealed all night. In the morning, upon the return of the men, the signal-gun, agreed upon the day before, was fired, and all returned to their homes unharmed.

THE ATLAS

THE ATLAS OF THE WORLD

The Atlas of the World is a comprehensive reference work containing detailed maps of the world and its various regions. It includes information on the physical features, political boundaries, and cultural characteristics of each country and territory. The Atlas is designed to be a valuable resource for students, teachers, and anyone interested in geography and world affairs. It provides a clear and concise overview of the world, making it an essential tool for understanding our planet and its diverse peoples and cultures. The Atlas is available in both print and digital formats, ensuring that it is accessible to a wide range of users. It is a must-have for anyone who wants to learn more about the world and its many wonders.

Ruth Labaree, a native of Charlestown, afterwards wife of Nathan Hurd, one of the early settlers here, and whose father was taken prisoner by the same company that captured and carried away Mrs. Johnson, escaped sharing a similar fate by hiding under a log. Several times, in search of her, the Indians passed over the log under which she was concealed. She was often heard to say that her heart beat so loud she was afraid the Indians would hear it, and thus discover her hiding-place.

Rev. Peter Paul Osunkhirhine, an Indian clergyman, of St. Francis, Canada East, visited this town in April, 1861. He came to this place some forty years previous, entirely uneducated. Here he prepared for college, under the tuition of Rev. Mr. Wheelock, the then Congregational minister of this town, and graduated at Moore's Indian Charity School, connected with Dartmouth college. For the last twenty-six years previous to his visit, he had been a missionary among the Indians, and had shared their fortunes. He had been in the employ of the British Fur Company, and was recollected while here as an expert at hunting and fishing. On one occasion, while at school in this town, seeing a squirrel at the door, he darted out of the school-room, gave chase to the animal, and was not again seen for several days. He was at length found upon Sunapee mountain.

IRISH. Emigrants from Ireland began to come to this town as early as 1835,—since which time they have become comparatively numerous, and are now among our most industrious, thriving, and valuable citizens. Among them were the Hericks, the Lyons, the Whalens, the Reardons, the Burkes, the Flanagans, the Burnses, the Cotters, the Farrells, the Aherns, the Keefes, the Kingsleys, and the Learys.

FRENCH. The Canadian French began coming here during the civil war.

NEGROES. Very early in the history of the town quite a colony of negroes settled on Coit mountain and its vicinity, mainly on the eastern slope. Vance Coit, one of their number, made his home near its summit. The cellar wall, the rosebush, and the balm still remain, to attest the spot where he lived. His residence there gave the mountain its name. Tradition says, that in him the moral sentiment was not always predominant, for at one time he was whipped at the post, at the Wilcox store, at the corner of Main and Maple streets, for stealing a bag of meal at Claremont. His wife, who was a white woman, was present at the time, and when the blood began to run down his back, became very much agitated, and rushing forward, exclaimed, "Don't lick him to death! give me a part of the blows!" It was thought that the theft might have been instigated by her.

The following incident is related of him: A neighbor, having some hay in a condition in which it would spoil unless taken care of on the Sabbath, applied to Vance for help, offering him a pound of sugar if he would assist in getting it in. Vance, with much apparent indignation, replied, "Do you think I would have my soul fry in hell to all eternity for a pound of sugar? No!"—then added, "Give me two pounds, and I will risk it."

Tom Billings, another of the colony who lived with Coit, deserted his wife, and ran away with a white girl to Canada. Robert Nott and Salem Colby were also among the number.

Jesse Sherburn, of a later period, was a boot-black. He was a very clever man, given to fun and poetry. Meeting the Rev. Mr. Woods, one morning, he said, "Sir, you shines the souls of men; I shines their uppers!"

Charles Hall was once a slave in Florida. The manner of his escape was in this wise: He was headed up in a sugar hogshead and put on board a vessel, without the knowledge of the captain, by a brother of Dea. Jonathan Cutting, and smuggled to Boston, from which place he was forwarded here to the deacon. Charley was a jolly soul, and few ever plied him with a joke who did not get back a repartee that made them willing to quit even.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

SECESSION.

NEWPORT, in common with other towns along the valley of the Connecticut river, once seceded from New Hampshire and joined the state of Vermont. The following extracts, taken from the town records, show the action of the town in the matter. March 14, 1781, in the warrant calling a town-meeting, we find the following:

Art. 4. To see if the town will accept the doings of the Convention lastly held at Cornish in order to join the State of Vermont and comply with the requisitions of said convention in sending a Representative to the Assembly to be holden in Windsor in said state the first Wednesday of April next.

March 29, 1781. Voted this town of Newport join in union with the State of Vermont. Voted Benj. Giles, Esq, to be a Delegate to Represent the town of Newport in the General Assembly of Vermont to be holden at Windsor in the state of Vermont the first Wednesday in April next ensuing. Voted that Aaron Buell, Jesse Wilcox, and Josiah Stevens be a committee to give instructions to the Representative above named for his direction in the General Assembly of Vermont.

May 2, 1781, the town was notified to meet, in order to be qualified as freemen of Vermont, and vote for judges of the courts, sheriff, judge of probate, and justices of the peace. On the 14th of the same month they met and chose town officers, in accordance with the laws of Vermont. The town, however, soon returned its allegiance to this state; for we find that the next annual meeting, in March, 1782, was called in the name of the state of New Hampshire.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

MISCELLANY.

THE following incidents and anecdotes were mainly gathered at the time of the historical celebration in 1846.

The first blow struck in felling the forests in town was by Absalom Kelsey, on the D. F. Pike farm at the foot of Claremont hill. Which farm should have the honor of the first blow, had been previously decided by lot.

The first cabin in town, the one in which the six young men, who came to town in 1765 and commenced clearing away the forest, had shelter, stood on the gentle swell of land a few rods south of the house now occupied by Reuben Ainger at the foot of Claremont hill. It was covered, sides and roof, with hemlock bark, stayed in its place between poles confined together by means of withes. They obtained their provisions at Charlestown, for which they paid in work during the haying season.

The first apple raised in town was by Benjamin Bragg, on the G. H. Fairbanks place. The tree bore but one apple: it disappeared, and what became of it was always a mystery. A young lady residing in the family at the time was always supposed to have been in some way accessory to the loss.

The first child born in town was a son of Jesse Wilcox, born Feb. 28. 1768, and died the March following. The first female born was Lydia Hurd, afterwards wife of Reuben Bascom, who was born in 1768, and died in April, 1847, aged 79 years.

Maj. Uriah Wilcox offered a crown to the first woman that should step foot into Newport. Mrs. Benjamin Bragg and Mrs. Zephaniah Clark were together near the line of the town, when it was said to them that such a tree was in Newport, when they both ran, and so near alike was their arrival that each received a crown.

Capt. Ezra Parmelee, while returning from Charlestown, where he had been to mill, was overtaken by the dark, and, fearing he might wander astray if he should go further, stopped, hitched his horse, lighted a fire, and spent the night. In the morning, to his surprise, he found himself within a few rods of his own door.

Mrs. Ezra Parmelee visited her old home at Killingworth, Conn., on horseback. When about to return, her father cut from an apple-tree a twig, to be used by her as a riding-stick. On her arrival, it was grafted into a tree in their orchard on the Griffin farm, now occupied by George E. Dame. Now, one hundred years after, the graft is in good condition, and bears an abundant crop of apples.

One of the early settlers brought a willow-sprout from Connecticut, which he used as a riding-stick. On his arrival, he stuck one end of it into the mud, near the former residence of Dea. Wilcox, on the Unity road, now occupied by Freeman Cutting, whereupon it grew and became a tall tree.

Mrs. Benjamin Bragg made out the first taxes in town.

Mrs. Robert Lane made the first cheese in town.

The apple-trees now standing above the brick-yard on the B. W. Jenks place were brought from Charlestown by Aaron Buell, 1st, more than one hundred years since.

Joseph Sawyer dug his well, sixteen feet deep, with a fire-shovel and a hemlock knot for a pick. He also raised four hundred bushels of potatoes, and carried them all into his cellar in a sap-trough.

Mrs. Ebenezer Merritt had a family of sixteen boarders. Her supplies consisted of the milk of one farrow cow,—from which she made half a pound of butter per week,—meal for porridge, and fish caught from the river. The boarders were all satisfied.

Matthew Buell, 2d, lived, the first summer, in his log barn. His wife did her cooking beside a pine stump near by. Her mince pies were made of pumpkins and bear's meat.

The larder of Mrs. Ezra Parmelee,—the woman afterwards so noted for her open-hearted hospitality, and who was expected to entertain the clergy and other distinguished visitors,—once contained only a few potatoes, a bag of rye meal, and the meat of a small pig, from which she contrived to manufacture a variety of dishes which were highly relished by her hungry boarders.

Mrs. Ebenezer Merritt stayed alone in her log cabin several weeks, while the other settlers were all away from town (probably at Charlestown, where the men worked at haying to pay for their provisions), a cow, a yoke of oxen, and a dog her only companions. It is said that the dog notified her of their return by his howling when they were a long way from the cabin.

Three of the men who came in 1768, having extra work to do, resolved to stay and finish it after their companions had left. At night they went to Bragg's camp, near the present residence of Mr. Fairbanks. Next morning a severe snow-storm arose, which compelled them either to follow their companions to No. 4, now Charlestown, or remain and starve. While travelling through Unity, one of the party, Mr. Merritt, became so chilled and tired that he thought he could go no further, and so laid himself down to die. Mr. Kelsey, who believed in resorting to severe remedies when gentle ones were ineffectual, cut some sprouts, and not very tenderly, but mercifully, applied them to Mr. Merritt's body. Mr. Merritt rose, and with an evil intention, it is supposed, pursued Mr. Kelsey. After running quite a distance the passion of Mr. Merritt subsided. He thanked his companion for the castigation, and all went on their way rejoicing, and reached their temporary home at Charlestown in safety.

April 19, 1870, after a long storm, the water in Sugar river and its branches rose higher than had ever before been known. Much damage was done to mills and bridges, and considerable alarm was felt lest Sunapee lake should sweep away the barriers at the outlet, and come down upon us.

S. Decatur Gilmore, son of John Gilmore, while on his way to San Francisco in 1853, was on board the ship Independence when it was burned off the Pacific coast. When he found it was on fire, he lashed together his trunk, valise, and other baggage, and placed them in a convenient situation to be thrown overboard. After rendering all the assistance in his power to those who were unable to swim, until the flames forbade a longer delay, he threw his baggage into the water and sprang in after it. With one hand upon it, he paddled with the other to the shore some three hundred yards away. For three days he subsisted on a loaf of cake which his provident wife had kindly packed in his trunk. His was the only baggage saved.

Jeremiah Walcott, son of Col. James D. Walcott, in 1821, slid from the roof of the Baptist church, then in the process of erection, to the ground, but alighted upon an open bunch of shingles which lay upon the margin of one of those deep bog-holes which greatly prevailed in the vicinity of that house in those days. He providentially escaped all material injury, but, in the opinion of the spectators, had "rather a muddy look."

THE PROPRIETORS' HOUSE. At the meeting of the Proprietors, held at the house of Jesse Wilcox, Nov. 23, 1772, Daniel Dudley, moderator, it was voted to erect a building "thirty feet in length by twenty feet in width, with one fire-place," to be finished the July following. A tax of fifteen shillings was levied on each proprietor to meet the expense. It was to be for any public use,—for a school-house when needed, and for a place of religious worship. Its roof was four-square, resembling the top slope of a modern French roof. It was located just south of the present residence of Rufus P. Claggett, on what was then the main street in the prospective village of Newport. Rev. James Parmelee, still living, remembers that it was boarded up and down with rough boards, like a barn. The interior of the building was never finished. A few boards were nailed upon the beams overhead, and around the sides. This served to increase the capacity of the house, for when the lower part was full, the youngsters would climb up and sit upon the beams and boards overhead. When they became noisy, as they sometimes would, the tithing-man, with his stern, solemn Sunday face, would rap upon the sides of the house with his wand of office, and point upward, when perfect silence would ensue.

CALIFORNIA GOLD. During the excitement occasioned by the discovery of gold in California, a company known as the "California Trading and Mining Company" was formed, with a capital stock amounting to some $30,000, which capital was divided into shares of $300 each. The company purchased a vessel known as the "Harriet Rockwell," and, loading it with articles of merchandise, provisions for the voyage, and all the various implements thought necessary to successful mining, set out for the land of gold, dreaming of a glorious future crowned with wealth and luxury. Several prominent men of Croydon were shareholders and members of this company. Among those who joined the company from this town were Shubael Hawes, who was chosen captain of the vessel, Austin Stockwell, Bela W. Jenks, and Jeremiah Ladd. Other young men, not possessing the means to purchase shares, were sent out by capitalists, who agreed to divide the profits; and still others, not connected with the company, went out. The enterprise did not prove so successful as was hoped.

COAL. The use of coal was introduced here in the autumn of 1872, on the opening of the railroad, since which time its use has been steadily increasing.

RECEPTION OF GEN. LAFAYETTE. This young Frenchman, thousands of miles away across the broad Atlantic at the commencement of our Revolutionary struggle, saw our perils and our needs. His sympathies were awakened, and he at once espoused our cause; and by his incessant labors at home, in procuring men and means, and by his perils in the field, side by side with Washington, had aided in achieving our independence. Now, after the lapse of half a century, he returned to witness the glorious fruits of his labors. Never was the triumphal march of hero or conqueror more grand or glorious. Wherever he journeyed, millions of warm hearts, filled with grateful remembrance of his noble deeds and sacrifices, rose up to do him homage.

On Monday evening, June 27, 1825, our village was honored with the presence of this distinguished guest. He was on his way from Concord, where he had received the grand welcome of the state, to Montpelier, where he was to receive a like welcome from Vermont. A committee of our citizens, accompanied by a long cavalcade, met the General at Sunapee and escorted him into town, where a very large concourse of people had assembled to greet his arrival. He and his suite alighted at the residence of Col. William Cheney, amid the acclamations of the multitude, the waving of banners, the ringing of bells, and the booming of cannon. Col. Cheney met him at the door, and bade him welcome in a brief but most cordial and appropriate address; after which he was introduced to the soldiers of the Revolution, and ladies and gentlemen. After partaking of the hospitalities of the house, the general was escorted by the artillery, committee of arrangements, and citizens to the residence of James Breck, Esq., by whom he was handsomely entertained; after which he took his departure for Claremont, where he was to spend the night. A beautiful triumphal arch was erected at the village bridge, over which the General was to pass, and also over the gateways at the residences of Mr. Cheney and Mr. Breck. Bright eyes and waving handkerchiefs greeted him from every window as he passed. As he left, all hearts followed him with benedictions.

DRESS. The clothing of the early settlers was almost entirely homespun. The men raised the wool and the flax, and their wives and daughters carded, spun, wove, dyed, and manufactured them into garments. In nearly every house was to be found all the machinery necessary to that purpose. The men wore frocks and breeches, the latter coming to the knee, where they were met by long stockings, to which they were fastened by a buckle. In winter the lower limbs were enveloped by leggings, which met the breeches likewise at the knee.

At a later period, for church and other "fix up" occasions, they had ruffled shirts, cocked hats, velvet or deerskin breeches, and wore powdered wigs, or did up their hair in a cue behind. After Reuben Bascom set up his clothing mill, the cloth designed for men's wear was usually dressed by him, and was manufactured into garments by tailoresses, who plied their occupation from house to house.

The ladies wore woollen gowns, aprons, and stockings, and thick shoes in winter, and tow and linen garments, and thinner shoes in summer. Their plain, simple dresses were in striking contrast with the elaborate display of their daughters in modern times.

MAPS OF THE VILLAGE. The first view of the village was engraved by Henry E. Baldwin, as early as 1833, on wood. In 1857, L. H. Bradford & Co. made a lithograph of the village, from a sketch by H. P. Moore. Another view of the village, lithograph, was published by Mr. Fowler in 1877. A view of the town and village was included in the map of Sullivan county, engraved by H. F. Walling, of New York, in 1860, and published by Smith & Morley.

POPULATION. The population of the town, as given by the Colonial Record in 1767, was,—males unmarried, between 16 and 60, 16; boys, 3; married men, 5; married women, 5;—whole number, 29.

In February, 1769, as stated by Gov. Wentworth in extending the charter of the town, there were 15 families here. In 1775 the population was 157; in 1790, 780; in 1830, 1,679; in 1850, 2,020; in 1860, 2,077; in 1870, 2,163; in 1878, 2,556.

The census takers belonging to this town were,—in 1840, John B. Stowell; in 1850, Matthew Harvey; 1860, Edward Wyman; 1870, Lyman J. Brooks.

ALTITUDES. The following table of altitudes was furnished by Richard S. Howe, Esq., civil engineer, of this town :

Sunapee lake, above mean tide water at Boston,	1,103 feet.
Sill front door new court-house, Newport, above mean tide water at Boston,	822 “

VILLAGE, COMMON, STREETS, AND SIDEWALKS.

VILLAGE. It is difficult to conceive of a more charming spot than that occupied by the main village of Newport. Extending through the town from north to south, dividing it into two nearly equal parts, is a beautiful meadow, several miles in length, and one half mile in width. The Croydon Branch of Sugar river, fresh from its mountain home, falls into it at the north; the Goshen Branch, foaming with its white spray, leaps over its granite falls into it at the south; while on the east, about midway between the northern and southern extremities, are poured in the waters of Sunapee lake. These waters uniting, after winding gracefully about the meadows, often beneath the wide-spreading branches of the elms which are scattered in all directions about the meadow and along the banks, flow away to the Connecticut. This meadow is bordered on the west by gently-swelling verdant hills, and on the east by a slightly elevated plain, which extends back to the base of Coit and East mountains. On this plateau, beneath these mountains, overlooking such scenery, lying on either side of the river and extending up along its banks, is the village, one of the pleasantest in the state. The main street, running parallel with the east margin of the meadow, is nearly two miles in length, on either side of which are neat and attractive homes.

THE COMMON. The common, the pride of our citizens, was originally an alder swamp, "in which the frogs, at certain seasons of the year, gave free concerts." The older inhabitants remember jumping from bog to bog as they crossed it, to keep out of the water. It was purchased of Col. William Cheney, in March, 1821, for the sum of $200. Tradition says Mr. Cheney had previously offered it to the town on condition that they would set out and maintain a row of trees on the east side ; but the rivalry between the different ends of the village, separated by Sugar river, then very animated and bitter, prevented an acceptance of the gift, now so valuable. The row of trees standing between the street and the west sidewalk was set out in 1831 by Joseph Farnsworth, Alvin Hatch, Amasa Edes, and Wm. H. Cheney. Those on the inside of the streets around the common were set out in 1866, mainly by Cyril Wheeler, Esq., and paid for by citizens living around the common. The centennial tree at the south end of the common was set out by the Grand Army of the Republic, July 4, 1876. The same year the elm, on the green plat where Maple street joins Main street, was planted by M. Harvey, J. H. Hunton, and Wm. Dunton. Centennial trees were planted around the Baptist church the same year.

A park at the south end of the common was fenced in and improved with walks, and decorated with shrubs and flowers, in 1859, by Dr. Thomas Sanborn, and the Messrs. Cross, then the proprietors of the Newport House.

The first town common, reserved and used many years by the early settlers, was on the Unity road, and occupied the table-land between the Call hill and the A. Pease house.

SIDEWALKS. The grading of sidewalks, now so attractive a feature of the village, originated in 1858 with Dea. Jonathan Cutting, Edmund Wheeler, Matthew Harvey, and A. and S. H. Edes. The work was commenced on the then narrow, unpleasant part of Main street, south of the bridge. Mr. Cutting was one of the selectmen, and contracted, as such, that when the job was done the town should pay one half of the expense.

VILLAGE STREETS. At the annual meeting, in March, 1875, a committee was appointed to name the streets and erect suitable signs. The following report, submitted by them to a special meeting of the citizens called for that purpose, was unanimously adopted, soon after which the signs were put up :

REPORT OF COMMITTEE FOR NAMING THE STREETS IN NEW-PORT VILLAGE.

The committee to whom was referred the matter of naming the streets in Newport village, having duly considered the subject, submit the following report :

Newport, May 1, 1875.

NEWPORT AS A SUMMER RESORT. Few towns in the state offer more attractions to the summer tourist than Newport. The character of its soil, its elevated position, its bracing air, and pure water, all combine to make it one of the most healthful localities to be found. Its good roads afford ample opportunity for pleasant drives, either along the valleys bordering on the streams, or over hills commanding fine prospects. Its numberless streams, and the many ponds in the adjoining towns, to which may be added Sunapee lake, afford abundance of fishing grounds. The lovely view from the dome of the court-house, and the more extended ones from Pike hill and Coit mountain, and Sunapee and Croydon mountains,—all of which command some of the finest views in the state, and are near at hand,—must gratify the lover of charming scenery. Unity Springs, with its fine hotel and varied attractions, is but a few miles away, affording an agreeable drive. The two hotels, new and commodious, the social character of the citizens, and our church privileges, are also among the attractions. It has been estimated that more than a thousand persons spend more or less of their summers here, thus showing that its merits have been in some measure appreciated.

BUSINESS BUILDINGS. The "Tontine," in its day, was the most famous structure. It stood upon the east side of the common, on the spot now occupied by the Methodist chapel and the two residences at the north of it. It was one hundred and fifty feet long, and four stories high. It had twenty-four nineteen-foot rooms, besides almost a countless number of back rooms, bed-rooms, etc. It had five huge stacks of chimneys, with large ovens in each story. The front roof projected several feet, forming a sort of awning, which was supported by pillars. It was built in 1818, by Col. William Cheney, for stores and mechanics' shops, with tenements above. It was considered, at the time of its erection, the most magnificent building in this portion of the state, and in its earlier days was occupied by the more fashionable people. In 1851 it was taken down, and the materials were wrought into the buildings that occupy its former site.

The Whittemore & Hurd block was built by Amos Little,

RICHARDS' BLOCK.

Esq., for a hat shop, and was enlarged by the present owners; the building now occupied by Fairbanks & Royce, by John Russ, for a shoe-shop and store; Burke's block, by James Breck, about 1836, for a store; Whitney store, by Simon Brown, for a printing-office; Woodbury's block, by Amos O. Woodbury, 1871; barbers' shop, by Rufus P. Dudley, 1870; Brown's office, by A. O. Woodbury, for a jewellers' store; Stowell's building, by Farnsworth & Hatch, for a store; Chase's building, by John B. Stowell; Richards block, by Dexter Richards, in 1874; Cheney block, by Col. William Cheney, for a dwelling,—enlarged and refitted by Dexter Richards in 1873; the Nettleton block, by B. Nettleton and F. W. Lewis; Bowers's office, by S. L. Bowers; Wheeler's block, by Edmund Wheeler, in 1858; Eagle block, by James Breck and Josiah Forsaith, in 1825, for a hotel; the Hubbell block, by William W. Hubbell, in 1872.

For county buildings, see County.

POST-OFFICE. The first post-office established in town was in 1810, and Dr. Arnold Ellis was appointed postmaster. Previous to this there were no regular mails in town. The letters were left at the stores, and were carried by whomsoever first journeyed in the desired direction. In this way the comparatively small number of letters written were sent to and from Connecticut and Massachusetts, where were the friends and early homes of the first settlers. An interesting incident in the postal history of the town is related: In the family of Mr. Thomas Carr, who lived on the farm now occupied by B. F. Carr, his grandson, was a large black dog, which he brought with him from Washington when he came to town. Mr. Carr would write a letter, and when it was evening, so that the dog might not be molested or the mail robbed, tie it upon the dog's neck, and send him away. The next morning he was always at the door of the friend in Washington, ready for the delivery of his message. He would feed the dog, keep him through the day, and at night send him away with a return mail.

As early as 1790, The Farmers' Museum, printed at Walpole, at that time the metropolis of this region, was carried by a post-rider on a circuit through Charlestown, Claremont, Newport, Unity, Lempster, and Acworth, to Alstead. He was loaded with parcels from family to family, and was made welcome to the hospitalities of all the homes along his route.

Since the removal of Mr. Ellis from town, the following persons have been postmasters: Erastus Baldwin, Lucy C. Baldwin, Aaron Nettleton, Jr., Bela Nettleton, Seth Richards, Calvin Wilcox, John B. Stowell, Sawyer Belknap, David W. Watkins, Sarah M. Watkins, Sam Nims, and George W. Nourse.

A post-office was opened at Northville, in January, 1878, called the North Newport post-office, and Ezra T. Sibley was appointed postmaster.

THE TELEGRAPH. The telegraph was put up, and in running order, the last week in July, 1866, just one hundred years from the settlement of the town. The citizens of the village contributed $1,000 towards its establishment. E. C. Converse was the first operator. The first telegram was, "The Atlantic cable has been laid, and is working finely;" and the afternoon mails confirmed the truth of the telegram. It was extended through to Claremont in October, 1873. Early in 1875, a private telegraph was erected by "our young folks," with lines in various directions about the village. In July of the same year it was extended to Northville, and in 1876 to Sunapee Harbor.

TELEPHONE. The telephone was first introduced into this town in July, 1877, by J. K. Pierce, a carriage-maker. It extended from his shop, on River street, to his residence on Maple street.

SIGNAL STATIONS. Two U. S. signal stations,—the one on Coit mountain and the other on Pike hill,—were located in town, Oct. 1, 1875.

ENGINE COMPANIES. Engine Company No. 1 was formed Nov. 17, 1832. Jonathan Cutting, David B. Chapin, Naylor Starbird, David Harris, and others organized the company, under the general act for incorporations. The engine had been previously purchased by individual subscriptions. The engine "Newport," now in use, was purchased at the Hunniman establishment in Boston, for the use of this company, in 1851. "The Rapid," a new engine from the same establishment, with hose, carriage, and all the modern improvements, was purchased in September, 1873, at a cost of more than $2,000, and a new company, No. 2, formed to take charge of it. The old company, with new uniforms, in 1860, was in a very flourishing condition under Capt. J. H. Cross, who was fond of military show, and joined in all public parades. The engine-house cost some $500; the new house cost about $1,200.

Charles H. Watts has for several years been chief of the fire department. Alexis J. Graves, S. H. Edes, Dexter Richards, Perley S. Coffin, F. W. Lewis, E. Wheeler, P. S. Adams, Sawyer Belknap, David Harris, Isaac A. Reed, Nathan Mudget, Abiathar Richards, B. F. Haven, Wallace L. Dow, S. L. Bowers, and W. E. Moore have been among the fire wards.

B. B. French, David Harris, George Muzzy, Truman L. Heath, W. W. White, and Martin L. Whittier have been captains of Co. No. 1; and John B. Cooper and Arthur W. Wallace, captains of No. 2.

RESERVOIRS. The reservoir in the park at the south end of the common was built in 1860, the town paying $200, and the remainder being contributed by individuals in its neighborhood. The one at the north end of the common, built in December, 1871, was done wholly by private subscriptions. The one at the south end of the village was built in the fall of 1874, also by private subscriptions.

AQUEDUCTS. The water from Cold Spring Grove was first introduced into the village by Samuel H. Edes, in 1856. The wood aqueduct first employed was replaced by one of iron and cement in 1862.

TOWN CLOCK. The town clock was purchased in 1839, at an expense of $300. It was removed from the Unitarian chapel, where it was first placed, to the tower of the county and town-hall building, in 1875.

CHAPTER XL.

REPORT FIXING VALUES, 1777.

THE following report will be interesting as showing the values placed upon things at that early day,—also as showing that all money transactions were then reckoned in pounds, shillings, and pence, instead of dollars and cents as now. Currency of all kinds was so scarce and so depreciated that the people were obliged to use produce as a substitute for it in their traffic. They built their bridges and their meeting-houses, and paid their minister's salary and their taxes, in produce. So general was the practice and so urgent the need, that a law was passed that a committee be appointed to regulate the prices:

CHAPTER XLI.

CELEBRATIONS.

HISTORICAL CELEBRATION, 1846.

THE eightieth anniversary of the settlement of the town was observed by a celebration on the Fourth of July, 1846. A procession was formed, and marched to the South church, where, after the usual preliminaries, the physical, civil, literary, religious, and miscellaneous histories of the town were read by the chairmen of the several committees appointed to prepare them; after which an eloquent oration was delivered by Rev. Baron Stow, D. D., of Boston, and an original hymn, written for the occasion by Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, was deaconed, after the ancient style, a line at a time, and sung by the congregation to the tune of Old Hundred. The procession was re-formed and marched back to the common, where a large bower had been erected and a free dinner had been provided, of which a large number partook, after which came music, sentiments, and responses.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION—FOURTH OF JULY, 1876.

At a preliminary meeting of the citizens of Newport, duly called for the purpose of considering the project of celebrating the Centennial Fourth of July, Francis Boardman, Esq., was chosen president, and Hon. George E. Dame, secretary. At this meeting it was unanimously resolved to have such celebration, and that the citizens of the neighboring towns be invited to participate. Accordingly a committee of arrangements, consisting of Edmund Wheeler, Dexter Richards, Matthew Harvey, Leander F. Dodge, and George F. Whitney, were appointed, with instructions to arrange such a programme as in their judgment would be most appropriate to the occasion, and to appoint the officers and committees necessary to carry out such programme. At a subsequent meeting their arrangements were approved.

Music—B. R. Allen, Charles Partridge, Wm. H. Belknap, George Pressey.

Seats and Stand—Francis Boardman, Perley S. Coffin, Leander F. Dodge, Richard S. Howe, George H. Fairbanks, Wm. Dunton, G. B. R. Watkins.

Fire-works—Henry Tubbs, W. F. Dow, E. P. Fisher, E. C. Converse, O. P. Baston.

Ladies representing States—Mrs. G. S. Little, Minnie Harvey, Sarah Dodge, Lizzie Barton.

Sunday-schools—The Superintendents.

Teams—Eugene A. Pollard, Charles J. Cutting, F. P. Meserve, F. P. Rowell.

Cavalcade—Geo. E. Dame, F. W. Lewis, Abiathar Richards, A. W. Rounsevel, F. A. Sibley, E. M. Hunton.

Antiquities—Charles Emerson, Benj. F. Haven, F. H. Goldthwaite, Wm. H. Perry.

Town Hall—Wm. Woodbury, P. S. Coffin, Granville Pollard.

Horribles—Bela Nettleton, Ransom Huntoon, A. W. Rounsevel, Wallace W. White, Geo. Tilton, W. A. F. Ladd.

A large crowd of spectators were amused, during the morning hours of the day, by the burlesque performance of a company of men known in the language of the times as "Horribles," who, with bands which seemed to embody the "flute, harp, sacbut, dulcimer, and all kinds of music," made their appearance in costumes that outstripped Falstaff's Ragged Regiment, in vehicles unique and variegated. After parading the main streets, they formed a hollow square around the Centennial Tree on the common, and were addressed by an individual representing Patrick Henry, in a style more marked for its grandiloquence than for its classic finish.

At midday, a grand Centennial Procession was formed in front of the Town Hall. It was headed by the Chief Marshal, Cornet Band, Grand Army, firemen in uniform, and ladies on horseback clad in white, with elaborate floral decorations, representing the states; and then came a long train of citizens, from this and the neighboring towns, on horseback, in carriages, and on foot, making by far the largest and most beautiful procession that ever marched our streets. After parading the more important thoroughfares, they returned to the hall, where the subsequent proceedings took place.

The President of the day, the Hon. Levi W. Barton, on calling the assembly to order, delivered an eloquent and appropriate speech. After prayer, music, and reading of the Declaration of Independence came the following sentiments and reponses:

1st toast. The Fourth of July—The perpetual monument which brings to us recollections of noble men, and shall transmit to latest times the memory of noble deeds.

Responded to by Geo. R. Brown, Esq.

2d toast. The Constitution of the United States—The noblest legacy of our fathers.

Responded to by Amasa Edes, Esq. :

The Constitution of the United States differs from those of the nations of the Eastern continent in being wholly a written one. By it the legislative, executive, and judiciary departments of the government are established, their several powers designated, limited, and defined, prescribing the modes, limits, rules, and regulations, and the modes by which each department shall perform its functions. It was not formed at once, at the birth of our nation, but was developed during the twelve or more succeeding years. It was formed by the people of the United States, and ratified by the several states. By it the United States is a nation, to exercise forever all the powers given it by that instrument, as limited therein; and the several states have all the powers of a separate nation not conferred on the general government, or limited or prohibited by the constitution. These separate jurisdictions should be jealously guarded by the people. It was the theory of the wise men who formed our constitutions, that all matters of a purely national nature, such as intercourse with foreign nations, war and peace, commerce and navigation, import and duties on importations, regulation of the currency, &c., should be delegated to the general government, and all matters of a local nature should remain under the jurisdiction of the several states. We of New Hampshire would be poor judges to decide on the local matters of California, and they would be so of ours. We cannot but admire the wisdom displayed in the formation of our Constitution.—the house of representatives coming every two years fresh from the people, apportioned to each state according to its population: the senate, apportioned two to each state for six years, aiming at the stability of the monarchical principle without its other evils; the president, chosen indirectly by the people, and liable to be impeached for violation of his duties; and a judiciary as independent as any in the world. No law can be made or executed without the concurrence of all these branches, representing in so many ways the voice of the people. The ballot lies at the foundation of these free institutions and of the Constitution:—destroy it, and they fall; preserve it pure, and they will stand. This is the palladium of liberty, and palsied be the hand or tongue that would violate or corrupt it!

3d toast. The Press—The bold and fearless champion of liberty a hundred years ago, and the oracle of progress and freedom to-day. May it never become the slave of faction, or the mouth-piece of despots.

Responded to by H. G. Carleton, Esq.:

In responding to the above sentiment in behalf of the Press, I must repeat what is well known, that it is the greatest moral power in the country, at the present time, in its action upon the popular mind, and in all probability will continue to be hereafter. In the days of the Revolution there were but few papers in the country, and these were published in the principal cities of the then Confederate States, having but a small circulation and limited influence. But that influence, although small, was exerted in behalf of the rights and liberties of the people. After independence from the British Crown was secured, and a new and popular system of government established, they continued to increase in numbers and influence until they have become by far the greatest power in the country for forming, organizing, and controlling public opinion. Their rapid growth and influence are no doubt, in a great measure, owing to the free institutions of the country and the general intelligence of the people.

Every important measure of government is discussed by the Press before it becomes a law, and its action upon the vast interests of the country well understood. It is the great vehicle of information, not only in every part of our own country, but of every enlightened nation throughout the world. A large and influential class of people read but little beside the newspapers of the day. They instruct them in politics, in religion, in business, in science, in the current news, as well as in all the important events which are transpiring upon the great theatre of public affairs in every part of the civilized world.

While their influence is upon the increase, it is pleasing to know that they are daily becoming more independent of all cliques and combinations of men, and consequently far better exponents than heretofore of the rights, interests, and welfare of the people, who are their great reliance and support, and whose interests and welfare they should ever labor to defend and maintain. In concluding, I will offer the following sentiment:

A Free Press—The corner-stone of a free government and a free people. While its continuance will insure their safety, its overthrow would be their destruction.

Responded to by Albert S. Wait, Esq.:

When the Union under the Articles of Confederation was seen to have failed, principally, if not wholly, for the reason that it possessed no other force or efficiency than a mere treaty among the states as so many independent powers, and when it was determined to institute a Union so fundamentally different as that it should be a government of the people individually, and not an agreement among states, it became apparent that all its sanctions must be applied and enforced by tribunals of its own, whose process should reach to the individual people of the nation; in short, that indispensable to the success of the new plan was a judicial system for the Union, whereby the constitution and the laws could be enforced without resort either to state legislatures or state courts.

As experience had shown that a fundamental law, resting upon tradition only, or subject to change by the legislature, was, in the altered circumstances of the people upon this continent, no longer appropriate, but that it ought to be clearly embodied in a written constitution, it was obvious that the preservation of this constitution, as well as the just administration of the laws, would require that they should be withdrawn from the control both of the legislative and the executive branches of the government. Hence it was provided in the constitution, that "The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish;" that "The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

Thus the judicial power was withdrawn from all the other branches of the government, and vested exclusively in the courts; and, effectually to secure it from encroachment, the tenure of office of the judges was made practically for life, and not subject to control or undue influence.

The question soon arose as to the legitimate province, power, and duty of the court, in case congress should transcend its proper functions by the passage of acts not warranted by the constitution. The court held that the constitution was the paramount law,—in fact, the supreme law of the land; that any act of the legislative branch of the government in conflict with it was of no force; that it was the duty of the court to uphold the constitution as the paramount law, and to decline to enforce, and to declare void and inoperative, any legislative act inconsistent with its provisions.

This was a new view of the province of the Judiciary. In England, whence all our traditions were derived, where the constitution was unwritten, and but a body of traditions which might be changed at the will of the king and parliament, no such power had ever been claimed for or assumed by the courts. It was strenuously denied and long resisted by able and distinguished statesmen, and was the subject of much controversy. The courts, however, remained firm in their earliest view, until it has finally become the settled law of the land; and no one now presumes to question its correctness.

Thus have the courts come to be recognized as the great conservative branch of our government. Many times in our history have parties, in the flush of temporary success and in the pursuit of partisan ends, attempted legislation inconsistent with the plain provisions of the constitution; and the executive has not always been a stranger to illegal and unconstitutional acts, destructive of our fundamental law. The courts, constituted as they generally are, not affected by partisan views, and not accessible to partisan influences, judge impartially of the rectitude of all such, by the light of the fundamental law, holding the scales even between all parties and all men, enforcing or declining to enforce, or even resisting legislative or executive acts, as they are or are not consistent with this supreme law.

The Judiciary has thus become the great fortress of the constitution, defending it from the assaults of power and the disintegrating influences of corruption. It is truly the great key-stone which supports the whole structure of the American government. Remove it, and nothing will remain but the discretion of the legislature, or the arbitrary will of the executive. The great landmarks of liberty owe their permanency to the judicial institution. Maintain that in its integrity, and the assaults of power will fall harmless at its feet, while it will remain the sure pilot which shall guide us through the tempestuous seas of ambition and of strife,—the anchor which shall moor us in safety within the peaceful harbor of free and republican institutions. Remove this, or lay it open to the corrupting influences of the partisan politician, and we shall have abandoned the rock of our safety and the anchor of our hope.

Let me close by giving you this sentiment:

The Judicial branch of our Government—The citadel of the American constitution—the embodiment of the spirit of justice—the rock of our defence—the anchor of our hope—the key-stone which supports the arch of American liberty. Let the scales of even justice never fall from its hands.

5th toast. Schools—Among the earliest institutions of our fathers. May they be the last to fade from the attention of coming generations.

Responded to by Rev. E. E. P. Abbott:

At the time when our Independence as a nation was declared, and afterwards when the constitution was finally adopted, there were many who believed that a written constitution would be the panacea for all political evils. John Adams was so sanguine as to declare that a government, with so many checks and balances of power as ours, could be safely entrusted to highwaymen.

We have, indeed, reason to rejoice to-day that we have so good a government: but the experience of the last century has taught us that its permanence depends less upon the outward form than upon the national heart. In our late Rebellion we demonstrated what constitutes a state. It was not the form of government that saved us, but the inward spirit—the intelligence, the integrity, the noble patriotism of the people.

Within a few years the United States have ventured upon a daring experiment. We have put the ballot into the hand of the slave just liberated from the yoke of bondage. We have unbounded faith, as a people, in our power to assimilate and elevate the foreigner—the lowest, it may be, in the social scale of European nations. We are committed to the doctrine of universal suffrage. It is impossible now to take a step backwards. What, then, is our only safety? We must educate our rulers. For our own preservation we must make much of our public schools. We must insist that every child in the land shall be trained in the elementary branches. One tyrannical autocrat is to be feared, but not so much as a million tyrants in arms, a brainless mob, led by unprincipled demagogues. This is, I am aware, a day for congratulations. But while I gladly recognize the broad foundations our fathers laid for popular education, and the liberal things they devised, I ask you, seriously, Has there been that relative advance in our public school system the past century which we had a right to expect?

It is so difficult "to get the floor" before such an audience, that I cannot lose the opportunity of putting the question, Considering how much is at stake, are we interested enough in our Common Schools? Only to mention the South, where the sad neglect must be recognized by all; passing by New York and Pennsylvania, where more men like Clinton were needed, until recently, to convince the people of their neglect in this particular;—in our own New England the Common School is indeed our glory, but it is also our shame,—our glory, that every district can boast of its school; our shame, that these schools are not made more effective. How many teachers are altogether unqualified to teach, much less to quicken, the young mind? Yet who of you ever heard of an uprising among the people? Amid all these fierce political excitements, can you tell me when the parents have risen, with genuine enthusiasm, and demanded that their children must be better taught?

Mr. Abbott alluded to the more encouraging signs, the interest taken by learned men in methods of education, and the bright career we might expect for our schools in the coming century. He closed with Lord Brougham's words: "Let the Soldier be abroad, if he will; he can do nothing in this age. There is another personage, less imposing in the eyes of some, perhaps insignificant;—the Schoolmaster is abroad, and I trust to him, armed with his primer, against the soldier in full military array."

6th toast. Vermont and New Hampshire in the Revolution—Stark and Allen.

Responded to by Alexander V. Hitchcock, Esq.:

Mr. President and Fellow-Citizens: At the name of Vermont and New Hampshire, when coupled with the events of the Revolution, the hearts of their sons kindle with just pride at the honorable and patriotic part taken by the citizens of these states in behalf of civil and religious liberty in our own country, and which liberty is permeating and shaking the monarchical governments of the world. When we remember Stark and Allen, and their comrades, leaving wives, children, friends, home, and all they held most dear, and follow them on the weary march, the bivouac, and into the fierce battles against the usurper's troops, which were superior in numbers, equipage, and discipline, and snatching victory from seeming defeat, we are led to exclaim, These men were armed with more than human strength; that the God of battles heard the supplications of an oppressed people, and caused the banner of the free to be unfurled amid the rejoicings of the people. This liberty, I believe, will ever be cherished and defended as long as Gen. Stark's words at the battle of Bennington shall be remembered: "See, men! there are the red-coats. We must beat them to-day, or Molly Stark's a widow!"—or the laconic answer of Col. Allen to the commander of Fort Ticonderoga: "I demand the surrender of the fort, in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress!" The sayings and the deeds of these patriots shall ever live in the hearts of their countrymen. In later wars, the sons of these noble men have shown equal bravery, courage, and valor, as did Vermont and New Hampshire, Stark and Allen, in the Revolution.

7th toast. Ireland—Her sons, identified with all our industries, have shared in all our wars, and ever proved true to the American flag and the American constitution.

Responded to by Timothy Whalan, a native of Ireland.

8th toast. Our Revolutionary Heroes.

Responded to by Hon. Harvey Huntoon, of Unity:

Heroes of 1776! On this memorial day we would again lay the laurel on your graves. Your labors were not in vain. This great Republic, the foundations of which were cemented with your blood, shall stand when the monarchies of the old world shall crumble in dust.

At the head of the list of the eminent heroes of the Revolution stands the name of Washington,—the greatest of them all; the most consummate general, statesman, and patriot; one of the few who have been great without being criminal. With such a leader, what could his countrymen be, but just and brave and true? Every man who took a commission under the then rebel government, or signed the Declaration of Independence, realized the fact that in case of failure he was putting a halter about his own neck; which led Franklin to say,—“If we don't hang together now, we shall all hang separate, by and by.”

I will not attempt to give you a list of even the names of those heroes whose deeds adorn the annals of our country, for they would fill a volume.

Our heroines, too, were numerous, and not surpassed by those of Greece or Rome. They were ever ready to sacrifice their all on the altar of liberty, to jeopardize life and friends for freedom. When the mother of Gen. Greene, who was a Quakeress, was taking leave of her son for the war, she said,—“Nathaniel, it would grieve me much to hear that an enemy's ball had hit thee in the back.” Such heroes and heroines have cast a bright halo of glory over our whole land. We are to-day enjoying the fruit of their labors. Let this and after generations follow their example, and the stars and stripes, the symbols of freedom, will continue to wave over this land.

9th toast. The State and the Church—Both necessary to the welfare of men, and each independent in its functions.

Responded to by Rev. Halsey C. Leavitt.

10th toast. Agriculture—The basis of a nation's wealth.

Responded to by Dr. Isaac A. Reed:

The first of these is the fact that the earth is not a perfect sphere, but is flattened at the poles and bulged at the equator. This is due to the centrifugal force of rotation, which tends to pull the material of the earth outwards from the axis of rotation. The second of these is the fact that the earth is not a uniform body, but is composed of different layers of material. The third of these is the fact that the earth is not a rigid body, but is capable of deformation.

Mr. President: We have met here to-day to celebrate the centennial anniversary of our country, and to me has been assigned the agreeable duty of saying a word in behalf of Agriculture. And first, I would say, Agriculture was the earliest occupation of man. Whether we consult inspiration or mythology, both alike attest that long before the human mind had conceived of literature, the arts, or of governments, it had been practised. It is not only the earliest, but by far the most important calling; and this is evident alike, whether we consider the numbers employed, or the grand products of their labors.

Agriculture bears upon its roll of honor some of the proudest names on record. Cincinnatus left the plow to vindicate the liberties of his country; Washington, who one hundred years ago drew his sword and led his country on to freedom, delighted in the broad acres of Mont Vernon; Silas Wright, the great statesman of New York, died with his hand upon his plow; and Daniel Webster, the intellectual giant of the world, died upon his farm at Marshfield, with a last request that his remains be borne to their final resting-place by the hands of God's noblemen, the farmers.

As we are to-day commencing on a new century, it is well to turn our thoughts backward, and see what we have achieved in the past. I am sure the retrospect would be most flattering. A century ago Agriculture was confined almost wholly to the Atlantic slope, a few pioneers just peering over the Alleghanies into the valley beyond. To-day she occupies the great basin of the Mississippi, with resources almost sufficient to feed a world. Not only this, but she has overleaped the Rocky Mountains, and, with the setting sun of to-day, the waters of the Pacific shall reflect back the shadows of the golden harvests which are now waving upon the broad fields of California and Oregon. The ways of Agriculture, also, have made as satisfactory a progress during the same time. The scythe, then borne on by weary hands, has given place to the mowing machine, which, like a triumphal chariot, is driven over the fields. The flail has vanished before the modern thrasher. We have now cultivators, gang-plows, and endless other like improvements. In short, allow me in closing to repeat, that Agriculture is by far the most important calling of man. It feeds the world, it clothes the world, it employs the world, it preserves the world. It is the grand base upon which rests all our industrial glory.

Responded to by Matthew Harvey, Esq.:

In contemplating the men of the Revolution, two eminent statesmen stand in the foreground of all its councils. Their purposes being identical, their action was in concert at all stages of the great struggle. Like the two brazen pillars, Jachin and Boaz, guarding the sacred temple which a Jewish king dedicated to God, John Hancock and Samuel Adams were the pillars of strength that guarded the temple of liberty which the men of '76 were about to dedicate to Independence.

In John Hancock, we at this moment see a massive figure, an expansive brow, and a ruddy cheek,—all indicating a man of about thirty years. He loved learning, and Old Harvard's diploma certified that he had obtained it. He had sought wealth, and already procured it by mercantile enterprise. He loved his quiet home, and his blooming young wife and children. But his country had interests at stake which he loved better than all these. He told what they were, when, a hundred years ago to-day, he placed that bold, defiant signature upon the Declaration of Independence.

Samuel Adams was an older man than Hancock, his peer in intellect, and his inferior in nothing save wealth. They stood side by side in all forums where American Independence was the theme of discussion. As orators, the palm would have been awarded to either, had the other been away. Their speeches were echoed across the ocean; and the King of Great Britain undertook to silence their tongues by bribery. To effect this purpose, he authorized a British officer to offer them any position of honor within the gift of the throne, if they would resume their allegiance to it. The message was delivered, and this their answer: "Tell His Majesty that there are not diamonds enough in his crown, or gold enough in his kingdom, to purchase the treachery of John Hancock and Samuel Adams." Then followed the King's proclamation of pardon to all concerned in the rebellion except these two insolent leaders. Thus proclaimed outlaws by the King, the people made them their idols. Each in turn was subsequently elected Governor, after the colony of Massachusetts had become a state, and the stones that were rejected were thus made the head of the corner.

Time completes the full circle of a century to-day, since these "noblest Romans of them all" embalmed their fame by a bold stroke of the eagle's quill. The inimitable signature of Hancock, among the "immortal fifty-six," never looked more defiant than it does to-day; and to-day, also, the stalwart form of Samuel Adams, embalmed by the artist's chisel in imperishable marble, takes a conspicuous place in the National Museum, there to remain through future centuries of the American Republic.

12th toast. Statesmen—They have reared a grand superstructure, having for its foundation liberty and equal rights.

Responded to by Samuel H. Edes, Esq.

13th toast. The Past Century—Its beginning witnessed a nation's birth; its end sees its glory.

Responded to by Edmund Wheeler, Esq.:

It is with the profoundest satisfaction that we on this Centennial Day turn our thoughts backward over the past hundred years, and recall the wonderful progress our country has made during that brief period.

Look, first, at our Territory. Then we had thirteen colonies, lying mainly along the Atlantic slope, comprising in all only some 300,000 square miles. Now our territory reaches from the Gulf of Mexico almost to the north pole, and from east to west it spans the entire continent. It now embraces nearly four million square miles, and has more than fifty states and territories. Among all the nations of the earth, two only lead us in amount of territory.

Next, contemplate our Population. Then we had a little more than three millions: now we have more than forty-four millions, and in population rank among the leading nations of the world.

In Agriculture, compare the rude efforts and still ruder implements of 1776, and the modest results of their labor, with the science of modern farming, with its planters, its reapers, its mowers, its threshers, etc., by means of which it produces more than a thousand million bushels of corn annually, and other grains and stock in proportion.

Take Commerce. Our trade, then small, was carried on mainly in a few British ships. Now our vessels whiten every sea, and reach every harbor on the habitable globe.

Turn for a moment to Manufactures. A hundred years ago our manufactures were few, of the rudest kind, and mainly by hand. Since then, mammoth factories, filled with all kinds of the most improved machinery which the prolific genius of man can invent, working in brass, in iron, in wood, in cotton, and in wool, have sprung up all over the land, and are flooding the world with the products of their labor.

Mark the change in our Military condition. Contrast for a moment the humble band, with flint-lock guns, poor in everything save pluck and patriotism, which achieved our independence, with the million soldiers of our late war, with their breech-loading rifles and iron-clad monitors.

Look at the Telegraph. Then electricity was a fierce monster, roaming wild whithersoever it pleased among the clouds, and sending its fearful bolts upon whatsoever and whomsoever it would. To-day modern science has harnessed that monster, and with it has almost annihilated time and space.

Look at Travel and Transportation. Railroads were then undreamed of. Our grandmothers rode on pillions behind our grandfathers, or on ox-sleds, or in ox-carts, for such were almost the only means of travel in those days, and they went over illy wrought, tedious roads. Transportation of goods was then by the slow progress of teams. To-day, seated in palace-cars, we are whirled with lightning speed all over the civilized world; and the long trains of heavy merchandise, rushing in all directions night and day, are in proud contrast with the transportation of other days.

Steam, in its wonderful resources, then comparatively unknown, is to-day the great propelling power of the earth. Besides countless railroad trains and an untold amount of machinery, it is driving unnumbered boats and ships over all the rivers, lakes, and oceans of the world.

Once more, the Printing-Press. Then there were scarcely thirty in the whole country, and those so clumsy as to be able to turn off but a few hundred copies a day at best. Now our mammoth presses will print and fold a morning edition of a hundred thousand copies before breakfast.

These are but specimens of the vast strides our country has made in all directions during the last hundred years. Such has been the Past Century, to which we bid adieu to-day. Now, in conclusion, let us ask. May we not hope that the sun of American Liberty, which has dawned so auspiciously upon our country, scattering sunshine, progress, and blessing all around us, will ride onward and upward to its glorious meridian, and illumine the whole broad earth, and, if it descend at all, go placidly down in the west only when time shall cease?

14th toast. The Coming Century—Its dawn gilded by the bow of promise.

Responded to by Rev. Charles Peabody, of Chicago, Ill., a native of Newport:

I have just come on to this, my native town, from the deep bosom of the great West, to get a little rest among these old hills, and find myself to-day suddenly snapped up to reply to the toast, "The Coming Century." I am no prophet or son of a prophet. You require me to lift the dark curtain of the future, and tell what lies beyond. I am to rehearse what the next hundred years will bring forth. At first, I thought it was a hard and impossible task; but, looking at it again, it seems not so difficult after all. We will lay down our measuring-rod over the Past Century, marking along upon it the progress that has been made, the changes that have taken place, the improvements in agriculture, in manufactures, in art, in learning, in invention, in science, and in morals, and then, reversing our measuring-rod, we will thrust it into the dark future. It will reach down through the coming years to the year 1976. It is fair to conclude that the same progress will be made during the Coming Century as has been made during the past. Human nature is the same; man's restless activity is the same. His passions never die out in the wear of centuries. Calculate, then, if possible, the amount of progress in the last hundred years, and estimate by this the progress of the Coming Century. Along our measuring-rod you will find marked, in the separate decades, with tolerable exactness, the events which will transpire. Here and there will be bloody wars. In another place will come out a great invention, which will far exceed the power of steam, and throw Watt and Fulton far into the shade. Before one fourth of these coming hundred years have passed, men will begin to navigate the air, and then our railroad stock will be worthless. There will be a ticket-office in Richards block, where tickets will be sold, by balloon, for San Francisco. Then this invention of Prof. Morse—the electric telegraph—will be improved and extended, and instead of a few wires running along railroad tracks between city and city, the whole country,—towns, villages, and farms,—will be crossed and recrossed with wires, like a spider's web in a dewy morning. Men and women, boys and girls, will freely talk with each other by the Morse alphabet, ten, fifty, and a hundred miles away. Young men and maidens will do their courting by telegraph. There is a man in Chicago, where I live,—and he has never been to college,—who has discovered a method by which musical sounds are sent over the wires instead of the click which you hear from the instrument. If musical sounds can thus be transmitted, why not the tones of the human voice? I have no doubt that within the lifetime of some of these young persons before me, men will be able to talk to each other over the wires fifty or a hundred miles off, as freely as face to face. These improvements will go on; and, before half the century has passed, the people of Newport will be able to sit in their quiet parlors of a Sunday morning, and listen to their favorite preacher in Boston or New York. Not only over the land, but beneath the ocean waves, along the cables on the bottom of the sea, will travel the tones of the human voice. If you and I, Mr. President, could live long enough, we should be able, within this Coming Century, to sit in our own homes and listen to the stormy debates of the French assembly at Versailles, or hear from her own lips the Queen's speech to Parliament.

15th toast. The Men of the Present Time—Of those to whom much is given, much is required.

Responded to by Rev. O. H. Jasper, D. D. :

Mr. President: I am to speak of the gifts of the past to the coming century, the first to the second; and I have just five minutes to perform this pleasant duty in. I think all must be impressed by the greatness of the undertaking. One might as well attempt to compress the ocean into a nutshell, or all time into a day. With this more than Herculean task, I shall not be required to even name any of the purely negative gifts—such as our immense indebtedness in nation, state, county, municipalities, and private accounts; nor to dwell on our manufacturing enterprises, diffused as they are through the entire range of the industrial arts; nor to refer to our shipping interests; nor to even think of our war material and preparations for defence; nor of the experienced commanders in war, all covered with glory and waiting for more worlds to conquer. Nor shall I be expected to dwell on that gigantic social force, commonly known among us as the “rum power.” Whatever it may have been at the beginning of the first century, we pass it along to the second as a fifteen-hundred-million-dollar power of positive evil, whose only harvest is 60,000 deaths per annum, and a liberal furnishing of occupants to our prisons, almshouses, asylums, and victims for the gallows,—making 500,000 drunkards, raising to beggary, ignorance, and crime 100,000 children, and sending to prison 100,000 persons every year! And we must pass to our children the task of estimating the accompaniment of sorrows to this fearful bequest. Nor can I even glance at the array of historic names which pass along as the great lights of the coming century. Our lists are full in all the departments—of statesmanship, literature, law, medicine, and divinity; and we can only say to the coming generations, Look, and learn. But to the solid and the generally accepted and recognized gifts I may briefly refer. And first of all, our experience is worth something, and not alone to our successors, but to the whole human race. Ours has been an apprenticeship in self-government, which ought not to be lost by our sons. They may grow wiser than their fathers were, but they will find it safe to hold fast to the first principles of the republic. Population is one of the elements of strength. And of this item we pass to the second century 40,000,000 of people, in the place of 3,000,000 at the beginning. In a territorial view we have expanded from 300,000 square miles to 3,000,000 square miles, and no doubt there is more to follow. And on this territory we have laid off, in useful lines, 150,000 miles of railroads, at a cost of $12,000,000,000. Over the same territory we have stretched 200,000 miles of telegraph. How many steamships float on our rivers, lakes, and oceans, I have not inquired. But those last three items are new. Our fathers had none of these to start their century with. And these are invaluable gifts, and a commensurate return will be expected. And these are not all:—sewing machines, knitting machines, &c., swell the list, till it seems full, and leaves nothing more to do. And these are material. But the religious bequests are still more important, and not less rich. We furnish to our population of 40,000,000, 22,000,000 of church sittings, which is all that are called for at present. There are 7,500,000 church communicants; there are 55,000 ministers in the country; and church property amounting to $355,000,000. We spend in the cause of benevolence the sum of $7,000,000; we pay to the support of the Christian ministry a little less than $50,000,000; and for other current church expenses perhaps an equal sum,—while we spend $700,000,000 annually for intoxicating liquors.

In summing up, it is a pleasure to be able to say, that as a nation we occupy a position among the nations of the earth second to none and before many. And this position, so proudly ours to-day, has been reached by the wisdom and toil of the men of the first century. They began small and poor, but they have made their mark. This position with all its prestige, we pass along to our sons and successors. And with this view, hurried and imperfect as it is, of the gifts of the first to the second century of our history, we shall not be regarded unreasonable if we expect a rich return. We, who stand between the two, with farewells to the first and salutes to the second, with the pride of the fathers and the hope of the sons swelling our hearts, may be excused if we expect great things. If the one talent of our fathers has produced five, surely the five we pass to the sons should not yield less than ten.

After music by the band, and a vote to adjourn to the Fourth of July, 1976, the meeting closed with three cheers for the Past Century and three for the new.

Thirteen guns were fired at sunrise, one hundred at noon, and at sunset one for each of the states and territories, accompanied by the ringing of all the bells.

In the evening there was a splendid display of fireworks on the common, and the town hall, public houses, and several private residences were brilliantly illuminated.

The first of these is the fact that the earth is not a perfect sphere, but is flattened at the poles and bulged at the equator. This is due to the centrifugal force of rotation, which tends to pull the material of the earth outwards at the equator and inwards at the poles.

The second of these is the fact that the earth is not a uniform body, but is composed of different layers of material. The outermost layer is the crust, which is composed of solid rock. Below the crust is the mantle, which is composed of molten material. At the center of the earth is the core, which is composed of molten iron and nickel.

The third of these is the fact that the earth is not a static body, but is constantly changing. The crust is constantly being broken up and remade by the forces of erosion and deposition. The mantle is constantly being heated and cooled by the forces of convection. The core is constantly being heated and cooled by the forces of convection.

The fourth of these is the fact that the earth is not a uniform body, but is composed of different layers of material. The outermost layer is the crust, which is composed of solid rock. Below the crust is the mantle, which is composed of molten material. At the center of the earth is the core, which is composed of molten iron and nickel.

The fifth of these is the fact that the earth is not a uniform body, but is composed of different layers of material. The outermost layer is the crust, which is composed of solid rock. Below the crust is the mantle, which is composed of molten material. At the center of the earth is the core, which is composed of molten iron and nickel.

The sixth of these is the fact that the earth is not a uniform body, but is composed of different layers of material. The outermost layer is the crust, which is composed of solid rock. Below the crust is the mantle, which is composed of molten material. At the center of the earth is the core, which is composed of molten iron and nickel.

The seventh of these is the fact that the earth is not a uniform body, but is composed of different layers of material. The outermost layer is the crust, which is composed of solid rock. Below the crust is the mantle, which is composed of molten material. At the center of the earth is the core, which is composed of molten iron and nickel.

The eighth of these is the fact that the earth is not a uniform body, but is composed of different layers of material. The outermost layer is the crust, which is composed of solid rock. Below the crust is the mantle, which is composed of molten material. At the center of the earth is the core, which is composed of molten iron and nickel.

The first part of the report deals with the general situation of the country. It is a very interesting study of the political and economic situation. The author has done a great deal of research and has gathered a wealth of material. The report is well written and is a valuable contribution to the study of the country. It is a pity that it is so short. I hope that the author will be able to publish a longer work in the future.

S. naval service, at the unsolicited instance of Hon. Edmund Burke, then U. S. Commissioner of Patents at Washington. He entered the naval academy, Annapolis, Md., November, 1847; attached to U. S. brig Porpoise, west coast of Africa, for the suppression of the slave trade, 1848-50; frigate Raritan, 50 guns, Pacific Squadron, 1850-53; landed with party of seamen and marines at Valparaiso, Chili, 1851, to protect American merchants and other citizens during a revolution there; naval academy, 1853, '54; graduated from that institution June, 1854, and was ordered to duty on Coast Survey, as passed midshipman; sailing-master of corvettes Fal-mouth and Saratoga, 1854, '55; commissioned a lieutenant Sept., 1855, and ordered to receiving-ship Ohio at Boston; corvette Portsmouth, Asiatic squadron, 1856-58; commanded a launch carrying a twelve-pound howitzer and 35 men at capture of the barrier forts, Canton river, China, November, 1856; assisted in undermining and blowing up the four forts, which mounted 176 guns (one of the guns, a brass piece, measuring 23 feet in length), and had four men of his party killed and eight wounded; U. S. S. Ohio, 1858; corvette St. Louis, 1859-61; commanded the boats of the St. Louis at both reinforcements of Fort Pickens, April, 1861, and piloted Gen. Harvey Brown into the fort; executive officer gunboat Huron, 1861, '62, and took part in the capture of Fernandina, St. John's, St. Augustine, St. Mary's, etc.; captured English steamer Cambria, loaded with arms, clothing, and medicines, which attempted to run the blockade into Charleston, and took her to Philadelphia for adjudication; was commissioned a lieutenant-commander, July, 1862; executive officer iron-clad frigate New Ironsides, 1862-64; in 27 engagements, with Forts Sumter and Moultrie, and other defences of Charleston harbor; commanded gunboat Seneca in latter part of '64; then transferred to the command of monitor Canonius, and was in two actions with that vessel, with Howlett House battery, up James river, near Richmond, Dec., '64, and took part in the actions of Dec., '64, and Jan., '65, which resulted in the capture of Fort Fisher, leading in and taking the advanced position; received more hits from the enemy than any other vessel; slightly wounded from fragment of shot, which broke to pieces on striking the turret; present at the evacuation of Charleston, and fired the last hostile shot at its defences; commanded the same vessel in the special squadron which went to Havana in quest of the rebel iron-clad Stone-wall; executive officer corvette Shenandoah, which sailed for Asiatic squadron, December, '65; promoted to commander, for efficient and conspicuous services during the war, on the way out, and assigned to the command of the flag-ship Hartford, on arrival at Hong Kong; commanded expedition against Indians on the island of Formosa, 1867—loss, one officer killed; participated in the ceremonies incident to the opening of the new treaty ports in Japan, January, '68; navigation officer, navy yard, Boston, 1869-72; May, '72, ordered to command the corvette Tuscarora, and sailed for the Pacific, through the straits of Magellan, the following month; April, '73, landed a detachment of seamen and marines at Panama, to protect the transit across the isthmus during a revolution there; May, '73, assigned to special duty in the Tuscarora, having been selected by the secretary of the navy to make deep-sea soundings across the North Pacific, between California and Japan, to determine the practicability of that route for the laying of a telegraph cable; took the recently devised but comparatively untried machine of Sir William Thomson, of Glasgow University, improved upon the details of its construction, and prosecuted the work with great success, working an entire revolution in the methods of deep-sea sounding, getting more accurate results than had hitherto been obtained, with a corresponding economy of labor and time; also invented three different cups, or cylinders, for bringing up specimens of soil and water from the ocean-bed, which are believed to be the best yet devised, whether in this country or Europe, and which have been adopted as standards by the navy department; got a depth of $5\frac{1}{4}$ statute miles on the coast of Japan, being the deepest water ever found in the ocean. The work of the Tuscarora excited great interest among scientists, both in this country and in Europe. He was detached from command of the Tuscarora, at his own request, October, '75, having run two lines of soundings across the Pacific; was offered the position of hydrographic inspector of the U. S. Coast Survey, at Washington, but declined; senior naval officer present at Honolulu, the capital of the Hawaiian Islands, February, '74, when the riot occurred at the election of Prince Kalukana as king, and landed a force of 160 officers, seamen, and marines from the Tuscarora and Portsmouth, and dispersed the rioters, receiving the thanks of the king and the legislative assembly therefor; ordered to command the U. S. S. Ohio, Boston, January 1, '75, and commissioned post captain, which grade in the navy corresponds to that of colonel in the army; March, '75, owing to ill-health, due to exposure on sounding expedition, was obliged to go South, and was ordered as captain of the yard, navy yard, Pensacola; June, '75, appointed member of the annual board of visitors to the naval academy, October, '75; ordered to academy as member of a board to examine two classes of midshipmen for promotion; member and president of several courts-martial; recently elected a Fellow of the American Geographical Society; was awarded a silver medal by the Geographical Society of France, at the international geographical congress, held in Paris, June, 1875, as a recognition of merit for the hydrographical work of the Tuscarora; May, '76, placed on special duty with reference to deep-sea sounding; author of various reports to navy department, of paper on deep-sea soundings read before the Asiatic Society of Japan, and of letters from China and Siam, etc. [See Literature.] He m., Dec. 23, 1861, Ellen D., dau. of Dr. Isaac A. Reed, d. Oct. 28, 1895; m., 2d, Dec. 8, 1866, Fanny G. Prescott, at Calcutta, India.

the first of these is the fact that the average life expectancy at birth in the United States is only 47 years. This is a very low figure, especially when compared with the life expectancy in other countries. For example, in Sweden the life expectancy at birth is 54 years, and in Japan it is 50 years. This low life expectancy is due to a number of factors, including poor sanitation, lack of medical care, and a diet that is high in fat and low in fiber. The second factor is the fact that the average income in the United States is only $1,000 per year. This is a very low income, especially when compared with the income in other countries. For example, in Sweden the average income is $2,000 per year, and in Japan it is $1,500 per year. This low income is due to a number of factors, including a lack of education, a lack of skills, and a lack of opportunities for employment. The third factor is the fact that the average education level in the United States is only 8 years. This is a very low education level, especially when compared with the education level in other countries. For example, in Sweden the average education level is 12 years, and in Japan it is 10 years. This low education level is due to a number of factors, including a lack of schools, a lack of teachers, and a lack of interest in education.

These three factors—low life expectancy, low income, and low education level—are all interrelated. For example, a low life expectancy leads to a low income, and a low income leads to a low education level. Similarly, a low education level leads to a low income, and a low income leads to a low life expectancy. This cycle of poverty and ill health is a major problem in the United States, and it is one that must be broken if the country is to become a more prosperous and healthy nation. The first step in breaking this cycle is to improve the education level. This can be done by building more schools, hiring more teachers, and providing more opportunities for students. The second step is to improve the income level. This can be done by providing more jobs, increasing the minimum wage, and providing more social security benefits. The third step is to improve the life expectancy. This can be done by improving sanitation, providing more medical care, and providing a healthier diet.

These three steps—improving education, income, and life expectancy—are all essential for breaking the cycle of poverty and ill health. Without these steps, the United States will continue to be a poor and unhealthy nation. It is time to take action to improve the lives of all Americans. The first step is to improve the education level. This can be done by building more schools, hiring more teachers, and providing more opportunities for students. The second step is to improve the income level. This can be done by providing more jobs, increasing the minimum wage, and providing more social security benefits. These three steps are all essential for breaking the cycle of poverty and ill health. Without these steps, the United States will continue to be a poor and unhealthy nation. BUELL.

The BUELL race in this country has descended from William Buell, who came from England to this country in 1630, and went with the Rev. Mr. Wareham's party through the wilderness, and settled at Windsor, Conn., in 1635. Those who have resided in this town, and who were numerous among the early emigrants, came from Killingworth, Conn.

GORDON BUELL, eldest son of Nathan and Thankful (Griffin) Buell, was b. at Killingworth, Conn., Feb. 21, 1752. He was an officer during the Revolution; served under Gen. Gates, and was at the battle of Saratoga. He was four years in the war, and by his hardships in the service became an invalid for life. He came to this town shortly after the Revolution, and settled in the eastern part of the town, near East Newport, on the C. McGregor farm, now owned by Dr. Thomas Sanborn, where he had some four hundred acres of land, and where he devoted himself to farming. He m., Apr. 10, 1783, Martha Whittlesey, of Saybrook, Conn., b. HORATIO BUELL, s. of Gordon and Martha (Whittlesey) Buell, was b. at Newport, Jan. 13, 1791. He graduated with honor at Dartmouth college in 1809; studied law; was admitted to the bar, and soon after removed to Glens Falls, N. Y., where his commanding talents and rare acquirements soon placed him in the front rank of his profession. He was a man of mark and influence in his day ; held in deservedly high consideration among those who knew him best ; an active politician, possessing the rare gift of moulding and moving men to his wishes, and having, withal, a high sense of honor and justice to guide and control his mental forces. JAMES BUELL, s. of Horatio and Elizabeth (McGregor) Buell, of Glens Falls, N. Y., and grandson of Gordon and Martha (Whittlesey) Buell, of Newport, and a nephew of Mrs. Sarah J. Hale, was b. at Glens Falls, Warren county, N. Y., Mar. 23, 1820. At the early age of four years, lost his mother, and when but fourteen years old he was left fatherless. Up to this latter period he had attended the district schools, and having made good use of his time, and being, besides, an apt, intelligent boy, had secured an excellent foundation upon which to build in later years. The interval from his fourteenth to his eighteenth year he spent on the farm of his grandfather, but, having no taste for a rural life, abandoned it to enter a dry goods store in Troy. After a thorough experience as clerk, at twenty-four he entered business for himself in the same city, and for eight years was a successful merchant, acquiring a high reputation for honesty, fair dealing, and sagacious enterprise. At the expiration of this time he was offered, and accepted, the position of cashier of the Central Bank of Troy. In this new field of duty, his special talent for finance was for the first time afforded proper scope for exercise and development. His connection with this financial institution lasted five years, when he received an invitation to go to the city of New York, and fill a similar position in the Importers and Traders Bank. He accepted the flattering invitation, and in 1857 entered upon his duties, succeeding Mr. George R. Conover. In this enlarged sphere, Mr. Buell displayed a profound knowledge of monetary processes, and a keen insight of commercial affairs. He labored zealously and diligently to promote the interests of the bank, and in 1865, at the end of eight years' unremitting exertion, was unanimously elected president. The Importers and Traders Bank commenced business in 1855. The first president of the institution was Lucius Hopkins, who held the office ten years. Mr. Buell became the next president, and under his management the bank entered upon an era of prosperity almost unexampled. At the time of Mr. Buell's election, the bank possessed $180,000, and the market value of its shares was 8 per cent above par. During the twelve years of his chief management, the surplus has been augmented gradually, till it now reaches the grand total of $1,608,000. During the same period, the market value of the stock has nearly doubled, while for nearly five years past an annual dividend of 14 per cent. has been paid the stockholders. The capital stock of the bank amounts to $1,800,000, and its note circulation, under the national banking act, to about $1,100,000. A distinctive feature of the institution is its allowance of interest on accounts of banks and bankers. Under this wise system the deposits have reached the enormous aggregate of $18,500,000, an amount greatly in excess of that held by any other bank in the United States. No more marked attestation of Mr. Buell's ability as a financier and executive need be adduced than the high degree of prosperity upon which the bank entered immediately after he assumed its management. A strong proof of the economy with which its affairs have been conducted exists in the fact, that upwards of twenty millions of dollars are kept on loan, at a cost, for supervision, security, and selection, which, if computed, would be found not to exceed one fortieth of one per cent. on the aggregate of current transactions. In 1874, when the demoralized condition of the national currency called imperatively for special legislation, the congressional committee on banking and currency invited Mr. Buell to visit Washington, and unfold his views of a proper remedial policy before that body. In 1875, Mr. Buell's financial plan received the substantial endorsement of incorporation into the currency measure proposed by the senior member from Ohio,—the present secretary of the treasury,—and known as the Sherman bill. In addition to his presidency of the Importers and Traders Bank, Mr. Buell is also a director of the Fifth Avenue Bank; he is also president of the United States Life Insurance Company. The management of this latter institution evinces alike his characteristic energy and wisdom. He was mainly instrumental in originating and sustaining the American Bankers' Association. He is a large landholder, and has an interest in railroads.

The following summary is taken from the N. Y. Era, of Nov. 9, 1878:

“James Buell is president of the Importers and Traders' Bank, which has become one of the strongest banks in the city under his management; president of the United States Life Insurance Company, which he has strengthened in the same way; an officer and a leading spirit in the National Bankers' Association, which spreads its arms all over the United States; a forcible and clear writer on finance; and last, but by no means least, the possessor of a private fortune estimated at five million dollars. Mr. Buell is of medium height, stout build, pleasant face, with sharp eyes, and a reserved manner.”

OLIVER M. BUELL, s. of Matthew and Sally K. (Martin) Buell, b. Jan. 30, 1821; remained at the old homestead on East mountain for a number of years, engaged in farming, after which he went to Lawrence, Mass., where he was engaged in trade until his death, which occurred in July, 1868. Married Abbie N. George.

Cora, b. June, 1855.

GEORGE E. BUELL, s. of Matthew and Fanny P. (Russell) Buell, b. Jan. 13, 1833. At the age of 14 was left fatherless; at 16, engaged himself to work in the factory of Coffin & Goodrich in this town. On attaining to his majority, he went to the West, where he was engaged in farming for three years, but Providence not smiling upon this enterprise, he abandoned it and returned East; soon went to Franklin, in this state, where he has since been engaged in the manufacture of knit goods, under the firm name of Walter Aiken. They employ one hundred hands, and do an extensive business, which has been pecuniarily so successful as to enable them to amass handsome fortunes. Mr. Buell was the projector of the knitting business, and has had the entire management of it. Mr. Aiken, being a machinist and practical engineer, has had his thoughts turned in other directions. Mr. Buell has for several years been a member of the Board of Education, and was an active mover in the project of grading the schools at Franklin, and in erecting the beautiful and substantial building for the accommodation of the various grades of the schools; is a member of the First Baptist church, and has taken a deep interest in its affairs, contributing a very valuable bell, the presence of which was first announced to the town and church by its ringing, and he has, in various other ways, been a liberal promoter of its interests. In 1878 he erected one of the finest business blocks in Franklin. He was educated at the district school, and at Tubbs academy at Washington; was a soldier three years; enlisted as a musician in the 1st Mass. Volunteers under Col. Cowdin. M., Jan. 9, 1855, Elvira M. Brown.

Addie, b. Oct. 7, 1859.

HENRY AUGUSTUS BUELL, s. of Matthew and Fanny P. (Russell) Buell, b. Nov. 13, 1839. At 7 years of age his father died; remained at the homestead until he was 18, and managed the farm work for his mother, going to school in the winter, and attending a few terms at Newport academy. He then went to Lawrence, Mass., entering the store of Oliver M. Buell, his brother, as a clerk, where he remained seven years. Oliver's health failing at this time, he sold out his business. In the same year (1865) Henry commenced business for himself, forming a partnership with Elvin Eastman, which continued ten years. He then purchased the interest of Mr. Eastman, and organized a new firm with the name of H. A. Buell & Co., being associated with Charles H. Hartwell and John L. Lamprey, Mr. B. owning one half of the concern. They are doing a large business, and have been financially successful. He enlisted in the 41st Mass. CARLETON.

HENRY G. CARLETON, b. at Bucksport, Me., Nov. 30, 1813. In 1823 his father, with his family, moved to Sutton, N. H. In addition to the educational opportunities offered by the country school of half a century ago, he had the advantage of an academical training at New Hampton. In Jan., 1832, he came to Newport, and learned his trade as a printer in the office of the Newport Spectator, then edited and published by B. B. French and Simon Brown. At the expiration of his apprenticeship, he went to Boston, where he spent four years in perfecting himself in his trade. Having become a thorough printer, and with a growing ambition for newspaper work, in Jan., 1840, in company with Matthew Harvey, he purchased from Henry E. Baldwin and Samuel C. Baldwin the New Hampshire Argus and Spectator, which has since been published and edited by the firm of Carleton & Harvey. He was register of deeds in 1844 and 1845; register of probate for the county of Sullivan in 1854, '55, '56; represented the town of Newport in the legislature of the state. For a long number of years he was a director of the Sugar River Bank, and subsequently of the First National Bank of Newport, and is now president of the Newport Savings Bank. CHENEY.

BY MAJ. WILLIAM CHENEY MANNING, A GRANDSON.

WILLIAM CHENEY was b. at Alstead, N. H., Aug. 9, 1776. He removed from there to Newport, Jan. 1, 1807, with his wife Tryphena, dau. of Phineas Hatch, of Alstead, and three children. He was bred a carpenter, but soon turned his attention to trade. He was a clerk in the store of Messrs. Shepherd & Hutchinson, who furnished him the necessary capital with which to commence business for himself. His first store was in one end of the Enoch Noyes house, at the foot of Claremont hill, in what was then the village of Newport. In 1810 he built the old Richards block, into which he removed his business, and which he continued to occupy till his death. In 1814 and '15 he built a large public house known as Nettleton's hotel, which stood on the site now occupied by the Newport House. Three years later he erected a large building, four stories high and one hundred and fifty feet long, called the "Tontine," designed for stores and mechanic shops. At about this time he sold the town the tract of land since used as a common. He had, the year previous to its purchase by the town, offered it gratis, subject only to certain conditions referring to the planting and protection of shade-trees. Some opposition having been expressed in town-meeting to its acceptance under any conditions the non-fulfilment of which would result in its forfeiture, the matter was dropped until next town-meeting, when it was voted to purchase the tract, subject to the same conditions insisted upon by Col. Cheney the previous year.

During the year 1815 he constructed the dam and canal which feed the upper tannery and the Newport and Eagle mills. On the canal he built a cotton factory and linseed oil-mill; and about the same time he built a grist-mill and saw-mill at the grist-mill dam below. About the year 1819 he purchased all the water-power at Sunapee Harbor, and built there a grist-mill, saw-mill, and carding-mill.

Col. Cheney had few educational advantages. He was characterized by indomitable energy and perseverance in all that he undertook, whether in private enterprise or for the public good, and was successful in most of his undertakings. He had a generous, sympathizing heart, which made him popular, and a cool, balanced judgment, which enabled him always to do the right thing in the right way. As illustrating the warm sympathies of his nature, it is related of him that he once took a poor, friendless old lady, who was on her way to the poor-house, into his own family, where she enjoyed all the hospitalities of his home for a long time.

Col. Cheney was often a moderator and selectman, and, during the years 1816, 1817, 1819, 1824, 1825, and 1827, a representative to the state legislature; and it was mainly by the persistency of his efforts, as such, that a division of Cheshire county was effected, and Newport became the county seat of the new county of Sullivan. He found opposed to him in the legislature, on this subject, some of the best legal talent of the state, prominent among which was the late Gov. Henry Hubbard. Having the right of the case, he met them with a good-natured, sometimes humorous, persistency, which finally triumphed. He was a friend of education, and assisted several young men who were fitting for college, and contributed generously towards the support of Newport academy. He was a deacon of the Baptist church, to which society he presented the ground upon which their church and parsonage now stand, and contributed largely towards the construction of the church edifice. The bell was purchased and placed in the tower, privately, at his own expense, its presence there being first announced to the society by its ringing. He was an ardent lover of music, and in his earlier years played the violin, thus contributing to the gayety of the quilting and husking parties of his neighborhood. He was mainly instrumental in the formation of a band, in 1815, of which he continued for a long time a supporter. The Masonic lodge, of which he was an active member, met for a long time at a hall in his residence. Passing through all the previous grades, he became a colonel in the state militia. When, in 1824, Lafayette passed through the town, he was received by a large escort and conducted to the residence of Mr. Cheney, where he met the warm and enthusiastic congratulations of the people.

No citizen has been more generally identified with the earlier history of the town than Col. Cheney. To him it is especially indebted for its early manufactures. He died, of consumption, on the 15th day of June, 1830, leaving a widow and eleven children, three having died in infancy. He left the largest estate ever administered in town up to the time of his death. Mrs. Cheney survived him many years. The Rev. Baron Stow, of Boston, in an obituary notice, says,—“Naturally amiable, she was regarded by all a model as a Christian, a wife, and mother. Though of the wealthiest family in town, she seemed not to know it, and like a true lady mingled with the poor and the more fortunate as if upon the same level, and thus won the hearts and commanded the respect of all.”

AUSTIN CORBIN, s. of Dr. James; b. Nov. 28, 1791, at Somers, Conn., and came to this town with his father the following spring. His educational advantages were superior to those of most young men of his time, for, in addition to the public school, he enjoyed a private tuition under Rev. Abijah Wines. During his younger days he was a successful and popular teacher. His father being necessarily absent much of the time attending to his professional duties, the care of the large farm, stock, and hired help devolved upon the son, who was thus early trained to business. He was a selectman in 1830 and 1831, a representative in 1832 and 1833, and in 1834 a state senator; was one of a company of three who purchased the Argus establishment while at Claremont, and removed it to this town; was a zealous promoter of liberal Christianity; was noted for his politeness and generous hospitality. Daniel C., b. Oct. 1, 1832; removed from N. H. to Iowa in 1852, where he was engaged in the real estate business till 1856, when he settled in Nebraska. He resided at Nebraska City until the discovery of gold in the vicinity of Pike's Peak. He was among the first to go there, and located at Denver, Col., in 1860. He very soon thereafter became largely engaged in transportation of goods across the Plains to the new gold regions, not only in Colorado, but in Utah, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming. He finally settled at Helena, Montana, in 1865, and was for some years heavily interested there in general merchandise. In 1868 he purchased, with one other gentleman, a controlling interest in the First National Bank at that place, and continued from that time forward to manage its affairs, until he left in fall of 1876. He then sold his interest in the bank, and removed to New York city, where he associated himself with his brother Austin in the building of the "Manhattan Beach Railway," and the improvement of its estate on the ocean. He became the managing director of the whole enterprise, and continues to occupy that position. The great success of this work is largely owing to his energy and good management; indeed, all his business operations have been carried forward with marked ability, and he has always taken the highest rank as a gentleman of the strictest integrity and honor. Married Louisa Jackson. Ch., Austin C., b. Sept. 24, 1863; Grace.

JONATHAN CUTTING, s. of Jonathan; b. Feb. 3, 1793; d. Mar. 16, 1865. At the age of four years, on the death of his father, he was bound to Jeremiah Jenckes, where he remained during his minority. He was a great lover of fun, and given to jokes, and spent a large share of his leisure evenings at places of public resort, where crowds would always gather to enjoy his anecdotes. We will relate only one of the many stories told of him. Once laboring for a man whose love of gain required his hands to be up, eat breakfast, and be miles away in the woods with an ox-team before light, he wished to give him a gentle reminder that he was asking too much, which was done in this wise: When asked to pray, one morning, he commenced thus: "We thank thee, O Lord, that thou hast brought us in safety thus far through the night, and if, in thy providence, we are permitted to see the light of another day, may we go forth to its duties with a cheerful heart and in thy fear," &c. The next morning he was permitted to eat his breakfast by daylight. He was a public-spirited citizen. He was a selectman some six years, and was an active deacon in the Baptist church, laboring much to promote its interests. He m. Mary Chapman, b. Apr. 6, 1803, d. June 1, 1849.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES

The first of these is the question of the origin of the disease. It is generally admitted that the disease is caused by a virus, but the exact nature of the virus is still a matter of controversy. Some authorities believe that it is a specific virus, while others believe that it is a general virus, such as the influenza virus.

The second question is the question of the mode of transmission. It is generally admitted that the disease is transmitted by direct contact with the patient, but the exact mode of transmission is still a matter of controversy.

The third question is the question of the incubation period. It is generally admitted that the incubation period is about 10 to 14 days, but the exact length of the incubation period is still a matter of controversy.

The fourth question is the question of the treatment. It is generally admitted that the disease is a self-limiting disease, and that the treatment is mainly symptomatic. However, some authorities believe that the disease can be treated with specific drugs, such as the influenza vaccine.

The fifth question is the question of the prevention. It is generally admitted that the disease can be prevented by vaccination, but the exact nature of the vaccine is still a matter of controversy.

The sixth question is the question of the prognosis. It is generally admitted that the disease has a good prognosis, but the exact prognosis is still a matter of controversy. Some authorities believe that the disease can be fatal, while others believe that it is a mild disease.

THOMAS W. GILMORE was b. at Amherst, N. H., Mar. 27, 1794, and was of Scottish descent. His grandfather, James Gillmore (as he spelled his name), was a captain in the Revolution, and carried the broad accent of Scotland in his speech. Commencing at the age of 14, Thomas was educated to mercantile pursuits. On attaining his majority he embarked in trade for himself, and had a successful business at Sanbornton, at Goshen, and at Newport, until about 1833, when he was appointed clerk of the courts for Sullivan county, which office he held until 1858, a period of 25 years. In 1860 he was nominated for presidential elector on the Douglas ticket. He was one of the founders of the National Bank in town, was a director, and for nearly twenty years its president. He was also a director in the Savings Bank. His mind was well balanced, and his financial judgment seldom erred. At his death he had devised the largest estate ever left in town. He always took a lively interest in the affairs of the village, and gave to the numerous charities of the day without ostentation. GILES.

BENJAMIN GILES, one of the early settlers, said to have been an Irishman by birth, came from Groton, Conn., and was during his life the leading man, not only of the town, but of this section of the state. He was a man of wealth and education beyond most of the early settlers. He was a devoted patriot. During the Revolution he was an important member of the provincial councils of the state; and during almost the entire Revolutionary struggle he was a delegate to the various conventions, or, as they were then called, "provincial congresses," which met to devise means for carrying on the war, and forming plans of government. He was a member of the convention which formed the first constitution of the state; was a member of the commission to settle the difficulties in regard to the boundary between Massachusetts and New Hampshire. It is said that he was imprisoned, by authority of His Majesty, for seditious acts, but when it was evening he was rescued by a band of patriots dressed in female attire. He was a representative, in 1775 and 1776, of six then classed towns in this vicinity; he was also a member of the state senate, and was elected to the council. When this town seceded from New Hampshire, in March, 1781, he was elected a delegate to the general assembly of Vermont, which was to meet at Windsor. He erected the first grist- and saw-mill in town. He died Nov., 1787, aged 70 years. His sister Mary m. Christopher Newton.

HALE.

DAVID HALE, m., Oct. 23, 1813, Sarah Josepha Buell, dau. of Gordon Buell. He was a successful lawyer, and was prominent among the Freemasons [see Lawyers]. After the early death of Mr. Hale, his widow, in order to procure the necessary means by which to maintain and educate her young family, devoted herself to literature, and became one of the most eminent of the literary women of the country. For a sketch of her life and works, see Literature.

David Emerson Hale, eldest son of David and Sarah J. Hale; b. Feb. 19, 1815. He entered West Point Military Academy at the age of 14, and on his graduation, in 1833, although the youngest in his class of one hundred and fifty, he stood the eighth in rank. He was appointed lieutenant in the First Artillery, at Beaufort, S. C., in 1833, and the following year he served against the Seminoles in Florida. In 1839 he was ordered to the Canada line, to defend the frontier during the difficulty between this country and England regarding the steamer "Caroline." The change of climate from Florida was too sudden for his constitution;—in April, 1839, he was seized with hemorrhage of the lungs, and died in a few hours, at the age of 25.

This family is descended from the Welsh, or ancient Britons. Robert Jenkes was of Wolverton (manor), parish of Eaton-under-Eywood, Shropshire, in the reign of Edward III. Herbert Jenks, Esq., possessed Wolverton about 1640, and his estate fell to his heirs by a daughter. From this ancestry was Joseph Jenks,¹ founder and machinist, of Hammersmith, England, b. in 1602. He was "a very ingenious man," and was induced

* This surname is found spelled Jenks, Jinks, Jynks, Jenkes, Jencks, and Jenckes. Some of these methods have arisen from careless spelling, the result of false pronunciation. The signatures of different members of the same family, as well as in some individual cases, in this country, are found to be Jenks, Jencks, and Jenckes. Joseph, Sen.,¹ spelled Jenks; Joseph, Jr.,² Jenckes. Their descendants chiefly follow the first method. Jeremiah's³ signatures were Jenks until his later years, when his signature is found to be Jenckes, the method adopted by his sons. His grandsons, however, have chiefly followed the first or simpler method.

by Gov. Winthrop, 2d, to establish "the iron and steel works" in Lynn, Mass., about 1642, the first worker in iron and brass in America. Joseph,² b. in Eng., in 1632, followed his father to Lynn about 1647; m. Esther Ballard, of Lynn, b. in Eng. in 1633; went to Providence, R. I., and established himself in his father's line of business at Pawtucket Falls, founding the city of that name. Nathaniel,³ of Providence, b. in 1662, m. Hannah Bosworth. Jonathan,⁴ of Providence, m. Mary Slack, of Scituate. Jonathan,⁵ of Cumberland, m. Hannah Pullen.

JEREMIAH JENKS,⁶ mariner and farmer; s. of Jonathan⁵ and Hannah (Pullen) Jenks; was b. in Smithfield, R. I., Nov. 29, 1739, and came to Newport prior to the Revolutionary war. A deed from James Sheldon to him, bearing date Jan. 24, 1771, attests the purchase of "one share, of 340 acres, on east side of Connecticut river (Newport)," one sixty-eighth part of its territory. In a deed of land purchased by him in "Saville," July 2, 1773, he is described as "late of Smithfield, R. I., now of Newport." Feb. 25, 1776, he m. Lucy Whipple, of Cumberland, R. I., b. April 16, 1746. Tradition says they arrived in Newport, with their household goods, July 4, 1776, and first established themselves on what is known as the Parmelee place, on the south road. In 1776 Mr. Jenks's name appears third on the list of signers of the "Association Test," which was circulated for signatures at the request of the Committee of Safety for the colony. At a meeting of the inhabitants, July 24, 1776, he was chosen lieutenant of the Newport volunteers, and was of those who left, June 9, 1777, to take part in the capture of Ticonderoga. July 10, of the same year, he was one of a committee of three to fix the value of farm products, which schedule of prices was to be used as a basis of exchange in lieu of money. In March, 1791, he was elected selectman; and Nov. 7, of the same year, he was one of a committee of five to superintend the building of the Congregational meeting-house, which for thirty years served that society, and stood near the foot of Claremont hill. Between 1778 and 1792 he made purchases of land from Josiah Stevens, Aaron Buell, James Church, Israel Bryan, Uriah Wilcox, Nathan Fisher, and Stephen Perry, by which he became the largest landholder in the town; in 1802 he was the heaviest tax-payer in Newport. He gave a farm of more than one hundred acres to each of three sons, the homestead of two hundred acres to a fourth, and a forty-acre lot of land to each of three daughters. Mr. Jenks was of unusual stature, as were three of his sons. He was several inches over six feet in height, with a corresponding muscular development. His wife and three of her daughters were nearly, if not quite, six feet tall. He d. Jan. 4, 1811; his wife survived him until May 19, 1819.

"Dr. Jenks," says Dr. Row, in announcing his death to the Medical Society, of which he was an active member and officer, "was in many respects a remarkable man, and in his life displayed as much energy and devotion in his profession as any practitioner I ever met. As a physician, he was accomplished and successful, proverbial for his kind and courteous demeanor towards his professional brethren, and urbanity to all. He was an active and consistent member of the Baptist church, and a devout Christian." Dr. F. D. Cunningham, of Richmond, in an address as president of the Virginia Medical Society, says,—“Among the names of those we mourn, none will be heard with more regret than that of Dr. Oliver B. Jenks, a gentleman who manifested the liveliest interest in our society from its organization. Although himself a victim to ill-health, with the spirit of a true philanthropist he made use of knowledge acquired at the expense of great suffering in his own person for the benefit of others. Those of us who attended the meeting at Norfolk can hardly fail to remember the extraordinary personal experience he then related, and the valuable conclusions he had deduced from it in regard to the use of chloroform in certain forms of heart disease. Our society never had a more ardent supporter, nor our members a better example.”

EDWARD AUGUSTUS JENKS, s. of Oliver, was b. Oct. 30, 1830; spent the first fifteen years of his life at the homestead; June 2, 1846, became an apprentice to Asa McFarland, printer, in Concord; at the close of his apprenticeship, he attended several terms at Thetford academy, Thetford, Vt., closing his connection with that institution in 1851. In April, 1852, he formed a copartnership with Joseph C. Abbott (afterwards U. S. Senator from North Carolina), and purchased the Manchester American, beginning his active business life in his 22d year, under the firm name of Abbott & Jenks. In 1856 he sold his interest in the American, and went to Lowell, Mass., where he resided two years. In 1858 he became a resident of New York city, where he was "proof-reader" in some of the largest publishing houses there; remained in that city until the spring of 1862, when he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and became connected with the firm of Alexander Swift & Co., iron manufacturers, and contractors for the building of the monitors Catawba, Oneota, Klamath, and Yuma, for the government, where he remained until their completion and delivery to the Navy Department. At the conclusion of the war, he went to Vicksburg, Miss., as the agent of John Swasey & Co., merchants of Cincinnati, for the purchase of cotton for shipment to Northern markets. The prosecution of his business took him to nearly all parts of the state, by rail, steamboat, and horseback, as well as to many of the neighboring states. In the preliminary work preparatory to the adoption of the new state constitution in 1869, and the readmission of Mississippi into the Union, he bore an active part. Oct. 1, 1871, he was called to the head of the Republican Press Association, of Concord, N. H. (publishers of the Daily Monitor and the Independent Statesman), as its Treasurer and Business Manager. Since holding this position he has three times been elected state printer; and in 1877, a vacancy occurring in the office of State Reporter (reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court), he was appointed to that office by Gov. Prescott. He has made many contributions to current literature, beginning, among magazines, with "The Knickerbocker," while under the editorial control of Charles G. Leland. Poems of his are to be found in some of the finest collections extant,—notably Bryant's new "Library of Poetry and Song," Dr. Kendrick's "Our Poetical Favorites," and Harpel's "Poets and Poetry of Printerdom." bury Horse Railroad. He devoted much attention to horticulture, in connection with his business; and invested largely in the silver-mining enterprise in the mines recently discovered in the vicinity of Newburyport, from which he realized a fortune. In 1874 he sold out his property in Newburyport and Boston, and went to London, England, where he now resides. He has ever cherished the liveliest interest in Kelleyville, to which place he gave the name, and often expresses a desire to return and spend the golden sunset of life amid the scenes and companions of his boyhood. CHARLES COTTON KIMBALL, s. of Jesse W. Kimball; b. in Newport, May 20, 1834; was taken by his parents to Wisconsin in 1840. In 1859 he graduated, with the highest honors, from Beloit college, Wis., and in 1862 from Union Theological Seminary in New York city. Still pursuing his favorite lines of study, he declined any settlement in the ministry, and remained in New York. During this period he preached in many of the pulpits of New York and Brooklyn. In 1864, declining a unanimous call from the Presbyterian church of New Hartford, N. Y. (near Utica), he took charge of that church for one year. His ministry was largely blessed, but, still pursuing his studies, he parted reluctantly from this church, which had increased fifty per cent. in membership, and took charge of the First Presbyterian church of Leroy, N. Y., for six months. This church retained his services for three years, during which time a heavy debt was paid, a new church was built and paid for, and its membership also increased one half. In 1867 he travelled extensively in Europe, acting as commissioner to the Evangelical Alliance, which met that year at Amsterdam in Holland. In 1868 he was called to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church, of Erie, Penn., over which he remained three years, when he accepted a call to the Central Presbyterian church, a new organization in the same city. This church, which began with fifty-four members, doubled in its first year, and continued to add one hundred per cent. to its membership annually, with regular increase, until the present time, occupying a noble stone edifice not yet completed, becoming the largest church in the city, and widely known for its zeal and efficiency. He is among the most interesting and eloquent divines of the country. M., June, 1866, Ruth, dau. of Hon. P. S. Root, of Utica, N. Y. They have had four children, one of whom d. in 1876.

LEAVITT.

HALSEY CARROLL LEAVITT, b. Sept. 27, 1827, in Gouverneur, St. Lawrence county, N. Y.; was the youngest of eight children, and worked upon the farm until the age of 21. In 1842 he was baptized into the fellowship of the First Baptist church of his native town. He commenced preaching in school-houses in his own town, under the direction of his pastor. The pressing demands for his services increased to such an extent that he felt the necessity of pursuing a course of study, to prepare himself for a more enlarged sphere of usefulness. In 1858 he went to Vermont, to attend the New Hampton school, located at Fairfax. In the fall of 1860 he was a supply to the church in West Bolton, Vt. ; in the following winter a revival followed his labors, which resulted in great good. Feb. 15, of that year, he was ordained as pastor of the church, and still continued his studies in connection with his class. He remained as pastor of this church four years. After serving a term in the Christian Commission, among the sick and wounded in Washington and before Petersburg, Va., during the war, he became the pastor of the Baptist church in Swanton, Vt. ; he remained there three years. In 1867 he accepted a call from the Baptist church in Cornish, where he remained five years. Sept. 29, 1872, he became pastor of the Baptist church in this town, closing his pastorate in Sept., 1878. He was elected president of the Sullivan County Musical Convention in 1874, and was reelected four years to the same office. FREDERICK W. LEWIS, s. of Frederick S.; b. April 6, 1828, at Claremont. He was hired out to work on a farm at eleven years of age, at four dollars per month, and continued at farm work three years. At fourteen he entered the store of Bela Nettleton of this town as a clerk. At twenty-four years of age was admitted as a partner in the same store, where he continued until the death of Mr. Nettleton, some seven years later, when he purchased the entire stock and continued the business until 1863. In 1862 he was chosen cashier of the Sugar River Bank, and held the position until 1865, when the bank was re-organized as a national bank, taking the name of "The First National Bank of Newport." He was elected cashier of this bank, which position he now occupies. Through his efforts, mainly, in 1868 a charter was obtained for the Newport Savings Bank. The bank was organized and commenced business in September of the same year. He was elected treasurer of the institution, and has since held the position. He was town-clerk one year, and has been elected town treasurer five years, and now holds the office. He was chairman of the committee which was chosen to superintend the building of the new town hall and court-house, in the erection of which he took a lively and active interest. He was instrumental in procuring the establishment of the telegraph to Newport, and worked early and late to secure the building of the railroad through the town. In early life he was active in military affairs, holding various commissions. He has been an active and interested member of the Unitarian church and society since its organization in Newport. Never soliciting or aspiring to political preferment, he has nevertheless frequently been nominated as candidate for selectman, representative, and state councillor. His substantial and elegant residence on Cheney street was erected by him in 1876. M., Oct. 2, 1856, Mary J. Travis, of Natick, Mass., b. Jan. 13, 1835.

ELIAS METCALF lived in the early days on the S. Kempton farm, and was a farmer and merchant. Tradition speaks of the first of these is the fact that the earth is not a perfect sphere, but is flattened at the poles and bulged out at the equator. This is due to the centrifugal force of rotation, which tends to pull the material of the earth outwards at the equator. The second of these is the fact that the earth is not a uniform body, but is composed of different layers of material. The third of these is the fact that the earth is not a rigid body, but is capable of being deformed by external forces.

The first part of the chapter is devoted to a general discussion of the principles of the theory of the function of the mind. It is shown that the mind is a complex system of organs, each of which has its own special function. The mind is not a single entity, but a collection of many different parts, each of which is capable of performing a specific task. CHAPTER I

The first thing that I observed when I came to the city of London was the great number of people that were in the streets. I had heard that it was a very large city, but I did not know how large it was. I was very much surprised to find that it was so large.

BY JOSEPH WARREN PARMELEE.

With the first party of settlers from the old colony of Connecticut, that one day in the pleasant month of June, in the year of our Lord 1766, made their camp in the woods on a rise of land overlooking the valley of Sugar river, and who had come to occupy lands in the township of Newport in the then royal province of New Hampshire, came Ezra Parmelee, then in the twenty-first year of his age. He was a descendant, in the fifth generation, from John Parmelee, who came to this country, as we are informed in the old colonial chronicles, in the good ship "Elizabeth and Ann," Roger Cooper, master, from London, Eng., in the year 1635, and settled in Guilford, Conn. The family were afterwards at New Haven, Killingworth, and other places in Connecticut; and in their generations bore an active part in fighting the savages, clearing the lands, and otherwise establishing the foundations of our New England civilization and culture.

EZRA PARMELEE was the third son and fourth child of Ezra and Jemima (Bushnell) Parmelee,* and was b. Aug. 25,

* Ezra Parmelee and Jemima Bushnell were m. Feb. 10, 1737. Their children were as follows: Daniel, b. June 22, 1739; Jerusha, b. May 23, 1741; Samuel, b. April 6, 1743; Ezra, b. Aug. 25, 1745; Oliver, b. March 19, 1747; Jemima, b. Aug. 8, 1750; Elias, b. March 29, 1752; Hial, b. Jan. 23, 1755.

1745. He grew up to manhood at the homestead of the family in Killingworth, participating in the labors of the farm, and enjoying such means of education as the place and period afforded. He was approaching that interesting period in the life of a young man, when he goes forth from his father's house and control to assume the duties and responsibilities of citizenship on his own account. In view of this important event, the father had acquired the lands in Newport, as has been described on other pages of this book, that were to be the heritage of the son.

In the original surveys of the valley of Newport, tracts or parcels of land were laid out, extending from the high lands on either side, across the intervale, in such manner as to afford each proprietor a variety of soils in upland and meadow, and also in timber and woodland. The Parmelee lot answering to this general description was located on the Goshen Branch of Sugar river, about a mile south of the four-corners at the foot of Claremont hill; and it was here that our young settler, axe in hand, commenced the work entrusted to his care.

In course of time the party of eight left their first encampment, and each one established himself on his own lot. Mr. Parmelee made his camp on the margin of the river, opposite the residence of the late Isaac Griffin. Its site was for many years marked by an apple-tree that he planted, but the freshets in later years have dislodged the tree, and so reconstructed the bank of the stream as to change all the original features of the place.

In this camp life he was necessarily his own caterer and cook. His larder was supplied with salt pork, Indian meal, salt, and other small necessities brought from Number Four, the nearest market. The woods abounded with game, and the river and brook with the speckled trout, which were available at nearly all times. The meal was mixed with water, and baked on trenchers of birch bark set up before his camp-fire; the pork was fried in a skillet, and the unctuous fat was relished upon the unleavened bread.

His bedstead might have attracted attention as a piece of chamber furniture, as it was a half section cut from a large hollow tree, the inside smoothed out and set up like a trough, and upholstered with dry leaves, over which he spread his blankets,—but it met all the conditions necessary for repose. “Sweet sleep,” says Horace, “despises not the cottage of the countryman,” and we doubt not it visited the incumbent of the hollow log, after a day of toil.

In course of time one Ephraim Towner came to share with him his cabin, and was his helper in his labors in the field. Don Quixote had his Sancho Panza, and Capt. Parmelee had his Towner,—but the intended brevity of this sketch will not admit of extended details. The party wrought industriously through the summer and fall, and on the approach of cold weather packed up and went back to Connecticut to spend the winter with their friends. They returned in the spring of 1767 to find that the wild beasts had almost entirely destroyed the crops of winter grain they had planted; but, undismayed, they prosecuted their labors through the years 1767 and 1768, Mr. Parmelee returning each winter to Killingworth,—and we think this was the course pursued by the other settlers at first. During these three years he had made good progress in opening up his farm, and we are now prepared to announce the next step taken in the progress of events.

In the neighborhood of the Parmelees in Killingworth, resided the Hill family. James Hill and Hannah Nettleton were married April 26, 1744. They were people in good circumstances, and surrounded at this time with a promising family of children, the eldest of whom, Sibyl, was born Oct. 10, 1746. She was now about twenty-two years of age, and the witchery of her name, or charms, had ensnared the heart of our young backwoodsman. They had grown up in the same society, attended the same school, heard the same preaching, and together they thought they might journey, not only to New Hampshire, but through life, and the time was at hand when they might give expression to their mutual affection at the altar. We accordingly give place to the following record, copied from the old church register at Killingworth:

“On the 1st day of May, 1769, Ezra Parmelee and Sibyl Hill, daughter of James and Hannah Hill, were joined in the marriage covenant by Rev. William Seward, pastor of the second church of Christ in Killingworth.”

Shortly after this event, leaving Sibyl at her father's, Mr. Parmelee came back to the settlement at Newport, making the trip this time with oxen, the cart being laden with furniture and house-keeping articles, which, with a heifer that was driven along with the team, comprised the wife's marriage portion, or "setting out."

Accomplishing this somewhat tedious trip, he commenced with renewed energy to prepare a home for his bride, who was to come up later in the season. He built a framed house, accomplishing the work mostly with his own hands. It was located on high land west of the present Unity road, and near a small stream of water known as Potash brook. The house was of one story, and necessarily a homely structure in every sense of the word, compared with our modern dwellings. Having good mechanical ability, he also made homespun chairs, tables, and other articles for domestic use, which, with those brought up on the cart, furnished the new habitation quite comfortably. Thus alternating in the labors of the field and the building, the time sped away. The autumn came, and with it the arrival of Ezra Parmelee, senior, with Sibyl, according to arrangement. They made the journey from Connecticut on horseback, she riding behind him on a pillion. The distance travelled was about 180 miles. There were but few women in the settlement at this time, and of course the arrival of Mrs. Parmelee was an event of great interest and joy. The greetings of the neighbors were most cordial, to say nothing of the expectant husband, and the house-warming that followed was among the events of the twelve-month. The Parmelee family were thus established in Newport.

Rhoda, b. Nov. 1, 1770.

Jemima, b. Feb. 25, 1783; d. Nov. 19, 1865.

Ezra, b. Jan. 7, 1776; d. July 16, 1798.

John, b. Oct. 18, 1778; d. Oct. 31, 1839.

Sibyl, b. Oct. 31, 1780; d. May 2, 1804.

James Hill, b. May 15, 1783; d. April 6, 1872.

Pamela, b. April 9, 1786; d. April 7, 1874.

Candace, b. April 7, 1793; d. Nov. 27, 1828.

It will be observed from the foregoing record, that the children of Ezra and Sibyl were born in the twenty-four years from 1770 to 1793. This also covers the Revolutionary period of our country. Bunker Hill, Saratoga, and Yorktown had gone into history, and the great American republic had been added to the family of nations.

In regard to the political sentiments of Capt. Parmelee during this crisis, it is proper to state, in this connection, that he was an ardent supporter of the patriot cause, but unable to render much personal service on account of the claims of his young and helpless family, who in this new country and rigorous climate were entirely dependent upon him for protection and support. He was, however, out on some raid as captain of volunteers, which accounts for the title of captain, which was awarded him in his later years; and on one occasion he gave his best yoke of cattle to hire a soldier to serve for a time in the continental army.

With the years 1771 and 1772, the affairs of the settlement of Newport began to assume a more prosperous condition. Additional settlers had come in, increasing the capital and productive industry of the community. The seasons had been propitious, and the labors of the husbandmen had been rewarded with harvests that promised an abundant supply of bread. The increase in the number of domestic animals was such as to insure meat. There was henceforth no occasion for going abroad for the common necessities of life, the home supply for man and beast being equal to any reasonable demands. Thus the industry and energy of a few stalwart men, had, in the five or six years they had wrought, changed a portion, at least, of the howling wilderness to which they first came into fruitful fields, and they had achieved for themselves an independent and prosperous condition.

Conspicuous in this progress was Ezra Parmelee. In the early prime of life, his well-knit frame and vigorous constitution were fully equal to the honest toil in which he engaged. In the clearing or in the field, around the camp-fire on the hunting excursion, or in the social circle at home, his genial disposition and good-fellowship were recognized and appreciated. Domestic in his tastes and habits, instead of lounging in public places and lobbying for office or preferment, his leisure hours were spent with his family. He improved his homestead and estate, and in the course of a few years came to be what was considered in those days as forehanded, or in good circumstances, and able to dispense a generous hospitality to friends and strangers visiting the town.

In this connection the good wife and mother claims our particular consideration. She was the presiding genius of a well-ordered household. In addition to the ordinary domestic, every-day work, she spun the wool and the flax, and wove the cloth, and fashioned and made garments for her children and husband. Her heart was full of sympathy as her hands were full of work, and she ministered to the necessities of her less prosperous neighbors,—those whom poverty and vicissitude and sickness had overtaken,—giving not only sympathy, but bread and garments and help. In this old representative family of New England we may find the true elements of happiness and prosperity,—industry and energy on the farm, and assiduity and frugality in the household.

A well-spread board, a cheerful hearth-stone, the large, old-fashioned blazing fire, surrounded by happy faces and loving hearts, enjoying the games and frolics of childhood and youth,—here is the fountain-head of that love for the old home that wells up in all hearts, and is with us in all the sterile ways through which we may pass to the last day's journey of this mortal life.

On the farm adjoining that of Capt. Parmelee, on the north, lived Dea. Josiah Stevens, father of the late Maj. Josiah Stevens. He had built a large, and at that time somewhat expensive, house on his place. The style of architecture adopted was, we think, peculiar to the colonial era of New England,—the front elevation being of two stories, surmounted with a short roof, and the rear sloping back from the ridgepole with a long roof to one story in height. He had occupied his new house but a short time, when adverse circumstances made it necessary for him to change his plans of living, and he sold his place to Capt. Parmelee. The Parmelees were at this time wanting more spacious accommodations for their growing family; and the Stevens dwelling and broad acres were a very desirable acquisition. It was in the autumn of 1793 that they took possession of the new place. The old house on the hill, in which all the children were born, and which had sheltered the family for nearly a quarter of a century, was moved down and attached to the new establishment, to give additional room for domestic uses. This composite structure remained the homestead of the family for the next forty-five years, or until 1838, and still retains its identity (1877) in the possession of S. A. Tenney. The new residence was improved in every possible manner: along in front, on the highway, erect and graceful as grenadiers, stood a file of Lombardy poplars; the dooryard was fenced off, and planted with flowers and shrubbery; the orchard and garden were conveniently located in the rear; and from the base of an adjacent ledge, down through the orchard, came in an aqueduct the cool water from an unfailing spring, to supply the house, and the barns and out-buildings on the opposite side of the street;—and all about were the evidences of thrift and husbandry.

The Parmelees were adherents or members of the Congregational church from the first, and friends of Rev. John Remele, Rev. Abijah Wines, and Rev. James R. Wheelock, their pastors during a series of years, and whom they supported and aided in word and deed.

Ezra and Sibyl Hill Parmelee lived to great age. Their days were spent in mutual confidence, aid, and comfort, the one for the other; and, living in their pleasant home, surrounded by children and friends, they descended into the vale of years, passing far beyond the allotted three-score years and ten of human life, until, with bended forms and whitened locks, they stood upon the outer margin of almost an entire century;—and so they passed away.

Ezra Parmelee died Jan. 18, 1838, aged 92 years, 4 months, 23 days; Sibyl Hill Parmelee died April 6, 1838, aged 92 years, 5 months, 26 days. Their remains rest in the old burial-ground, with some of their children and many of their contemporaries near them.

Dark shadows have crossed the picture we have presented in the preceding sketch. This life is not a scene of unalloyed happiness, by any means;—there are trials and conflicts; and to us the heavens are oftentimes hung with black. While to the Parmelees, during these many years, came prosperity and social position, there came, also, the chilling hand of death; and two of their beloved children,—a son and a daughter in the very prime of life,—were taken from them. We will take the reader to their grassy graves in the old burial-ground, and read from those ancient tablets their "short and simple annals," with the quaint epitaphs, which savor of the olden time, and which we wish to preserve on these pages:

"In memory of Ezra Parmelee, Jr., born Jan. 7, 1776. Died July 16, 1798, in the 23 year of his age.

" Beneath this stone Death's prisoner lies,
The stone will move, the prisoner rise,
When Jesus, with almighty word,
Calls on the dead to meet the Lord."

"In memory of Sibyl, daughter of Ezra and Sibyl Hill Parmelee. Born Oct. 31, 1780. Died May 2d, 1804, in the 24th year of her age.

" Beneath this stone there lies a mold,
A precious coin more worth than gold,
She in bloom in death declined,
In hopes a better world to find."

and the Kimball Union Academy at Meriden. He was for some time engaged in business in Newport. In 1847 he went to Charleston, S. C., and engaged in business with an old and wealthy house, into which he was afterwards admitted as a partner. The unfortunate civil war proved the destruction of his valuable interest in this business, and he came to New York city, where since 1863 he has been engaged with the dry-goods house of H. B. Claflin & Co., in connection with a separate interest in a business at Knoxville, Tenn. He m., Aug. 13, 1851, Frances Ann, only dau. of Amos Little, of Newport.

He left Newport in 1842, and was for five or six years in the office of the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. He afterwards turned his attention to dental surgery, the practice of which, in New York and Brooklyn, and more recently at Manchester, N. H., he has made the principal business of his life. Dec. 19, 1847, he married Abby Dix Jones, of Amherst, a niece of the late Thomas W. Gilmore. Their only child and daughter, born July 12, 1849, is the wife of E. B. Waite, of Manchester, where the family reside.

JAMES HILL PARMELEE, s. of Ezra; b. May 15, 1783; was graduated at Yale college, in 1808, and afterwards at the Theological Seminary at Princeton, of which institution he was one of the first graduates. He was for a time at the head of a classical school for young ladies in Baltimore, Md., but spent the vigor of his life in connection with the missionary enterprises of the Presbyterian church South and West; and when advancing years came upon him, he retired to his home on the banks of the Muskingum, nine miles below Zanesville, Ohio. He was for a number of years editor of the Zanesville Gazette. He d. April 6, 1872. Married Priscilla Horne, of Baltimore, an English lady of culture.

preparatory training at Kimball Union Academy; graduated at Dart. college in 1839, and at Union Theological Seminary, New York, in 1845. PERSON.

IRA PERSON, b. at Windsor, Vt., on the 28th of September, 1791. He was a son of William and Hannah Person, and a descendant from John Person, who emigrated from Yorkshire, Eng., to this country in 1616. After a thorough course of study at Randolph academy, he entered the sophomore class at Dartmouth college, in 1814. His health was such that he was unable to go on with his class. He, however, continued to prosecute his college studies. He commenced his ministry at Hartland, Vt., in April, 1818, and was ordained June 30, 1819. In answer to repeated calls he came to this town July 1, 1821, and was settled as pastor over the Baptist church, and continued here until July, 1835. After an interim of nearly three years, spent at Chester, Vt., he returned to his former charge at Newport, where he continued until November, 1842. The whole of his pastorate in town was nearly nineteen years. During his ministry here, 350 members were added to the church by baptism. After brief pastorates at Plymouth, Milford, and Lowell, Mass., he removed to Ludlow, Vt., in June, 1853, and there remained until 1872, when he gave up his pastoral labors, and returned to Newport, the birthplace of his wife, and where were spent so many of the early years of his ministry. His clerical labors, which continued more than fifty-six years, were in an unusual degree blessed with revivals. He has baptized nearly 600 persons, married 480 couples, and attended over 600 funerals. At 82 years of age he preached every Sabbath, and performed all the regular services of his pastorate except in the ordinance of baptism. In his intercourse with the world he has always been urbane and respectful, and always beloved by all. Sept. 5, 1816, he m. Sophia Jones Pollard, b. DEXTER RICHARDS, s. of Seth; b. Sept. 5, 1818; early engaged in the mercantile business,—first as a clerk, and afterwards as a partner with his father and brother Abiathar, occupying the store which had formerly been the place of business of William Cheney,—to which he devoted himself with success; later he became a part, and subsequently the sole, owner of the Sugar River Mills, where he engaged in manufacturing with such success as to become the wealthiest citizen of the town. A few years since he removed the old Cheney store, replacing it by the much larger and more finely built structure known as the “Richards block;” he also reconstructed and greatly enlarged the old Cheney brick dwelling, more recently owned by the late Dr. Thomas Sanborn, giving it the name of the “Cheney block,” and in which are the present post-office and Masonic hall; has also erected many other buildings in the town, besides the fine dwelling which is now his residence. He has held the offices of town-clerk and selectman; in 1865, 1866, and 1870, represented the town in the General Court; was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in 1872; has been a trustee of the N. H. Asylum for the Insane, also of the Orphans’ Home. In 1871 and 1872 he was a member of the executive council of the state, and in 1876 was a delegate in the convention for revising the constitution of the state. A member and deacon of the Congregational church in the town, he has greatly interested himself in its prosperity and success, contributing largely to the erection of its present chapel and parsonage, besides giving wholly its present fine organ. A patron, also, of educational interests in general, he gave $1,000 to found a scholarship at Dartmouth college; he is a trustee of Kimball Union Academy. He was formerly president of the Newport Savings Bank, and is now president of the First National Bank of Newport. He interests himself largely in the prosperity of the town, giving liberally in support of its business and social interests. M., Jan. 27, 1847, Louisa F., dau. of Dr. Mason Hatch, b. April 1, 1827.

theoretical framework of the study is based on a number of assumptions which are not always explicitly stated.

Secondly, the study is limited in scope to a particular area of research, and does not cover all aspects of the subject.

Thirdly, the study is based on a sample of subjects which may not be representative of the whole population.

Fourthly, the study is based on self-reported data, which may be subject to bias.

Fifthly, the study is based on a cross-sectional design, which does not allow for the study of changes over time.

Sixthly, the study is based on a quantitative approach, which does not allow for the study of individual experiences.

Seventhly, the study is based on a deductive approach, which does not allow for the study of new ideas.

Eighthly, the study is based on a reductionist approach, which does not allow for the study of the whole.

Ninthly, the study is based on a linear approach, which does not allow for the study of complex interactions.

Tenthly, the study is based on a static approach, which does not allow for the study of change.

Eleventhly, the study is based on a single method approach, which does not allow for the study of different methods.

He received his early training at the common schools, and pursued his classical studies with Rev. Leland Howard, of Windsor, Vt., but mainly at the academy in this town, defraying his expenses by teaching winter schools. In 1822, his health requiring a milder climate, he went to Washington, D. C., and entered Columbian college, where he graduated in 1825, with the first honors of his class; after which he edited for a year and a half The Columbian Star, a religious paper at the city of Washington. He was ordained as pastor of the Middle Street Baptist church, at Portsmouth, N. H., in 1827. On Dec. 15, 1832, he was installed over the Baldwin Place Baptist church, in Boston. In 1848 his impaired health induced him to resign this pastorate and accept the less onerous duties of pastor of the Rowe Street Baptist church, in the same city, where he continued until his death, which occurred Dec. 27, 1869. In 1846 Brown University conferred on him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity, and in 1854 Howard University repeated the honor. He was the author of several books and pamphlets, and wrote much for the periodical press. In 1840, and again in 1859, his people, at their own expense, sent him to Europe for his health, and for mental improvement. He was always and everywhere a favorite, so urbane his manners and so exemplary his life. He had eminent talents, and enjoyed a wide popularity. He m., Sept. 7, 1827, Elizabeth L., dau. of Benj. In 1813 he built the dam above the upper tannery, and dug a canal, on which he erected a factory for the manufacture of cotton yarn, on the site of the present Eagle Mills,—the first mill of the kind built in town. The machinery placed in this mill was brought from Rhode Island by ox-teams. He operated the factory several years, and sold to Franklin Simonds, late of Warner. He was an enterprising man, and was in trade several years near the bridge; owned and carried on the farm since

The following is a summary of the results of the investigation into the effect of the various factors mentioned above on the rate of the reaction. It is found that the rate of the reaction is affected by the concentration of the reactants, the temperature, and the presence of a catalyst. The rate of the reaction increases with an increase in the concentration of the reactants, with an increase in the temperature, and with the addition of a catalyst. The rate of the reaction is also affected by the surface area of the reactants, the nature of the solvent, and the pressure. The rate of the reaction increases with an increase in the surface area of the reactants, with a change in the nature of the solvent, and with an increase in the pressure. The rate of the reaction is also affected by the time of contact between the reactants, the nature of the catalyst, and the nature of the solvent. The rate of the reaction increases with an increase in the time of contact between the reactants, with a change in the nature of the catalyst, and with a change in the nature of the solvent.

Conclusion

The results of the investigation into the effect of the various factors mentioned above on the rate of the reaction are summarized in the following table. It is found that the rate of the reaction is affected by the concentration of the reactants, the temperature, and the presence of a catalyst. The rate of the reaction increases with an increase in the concentration of the reactants, with an increase in the temperature, and with the addition of a catalyst. The rate of the reaction is also affected by the surface area of the reactants, the nature of the solvent, and the pressure. The rate of the reaction increases with an increase in the surface area of the reactants, with a change in the nature of the solvent, and with an increase in the pressure. The rate of the reaction is also affected by the time of contact between the reactants, the nature of the catalyst, and the nature of the solvent. The rate of the reaction increases with an increase in the time of contact between the reactants, with a change in the nature of the catalyst, and with a change in the nature of the solvent.

The first of these is the fact that the system of taxation is not uniform. The rate of tax varies from one district to another, and from one class of property to another. This is a serious defect, and it is one which has led to the establishment of the system of local rates. The second defect is that the system of taxation is not based on the principle of ability to pay. The rate of tax is not proportional to the value of the property, and it is not based on the income of the owner. It is a well known fact that the human mind is capable of receiving and retaining a vast amount of information, and it is the duty of the teacher to make the most of this capacity.

The first step in the process of learning is to acquire the necessary knowledge and skills, and this can be achieved by the use of various methods and techniques.

second step is to apply this knowledge and skills in a practical manner, and this can be achieved by the use of various methods and techniques. The third step is to evaluate the results of the learning process, and this can be achieved by the use of various methods and techniques.

The fourth step is to reflect on the learning process, and this can be achieved by the use of various methods and techniques. The fifth step is to transfer the learning to other situations, and this can be achieved by the use of various methods and techniques.

WINES.

ABIJAH WINES, D. D., s. of Abijah; b. in Southold, Long Island, May 28, 1766. At the age of fifteen he came with his father's family to Newport. At the age of twenty he married Ruth, dau. of Hon. Benj. Giles. Both inheriting considerable property, they built the house now known as the Fred. Aiken house, where they commenced farming on a somewhat extensive scale. After a brief period, and after two children had been born to them, he experienced a change in his religious views, and determined to enter the ministry. He accordingly commenced his preparatory course of study, entered Dartmouth college as a sophomore, and graduated in 1794. He studied theology with Rev. Dr. Emmons, of Franklin, Mass., then one of the most eminent divines of New England. Completing his theological course, Mr. Wines returned to Newport, where, the Congregational church being vacant, he was invited to supply the pulpit. Contrary to the proverb that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, he proved so acceptable that he was invited to become their pastor. He accepted the invitation, and was ordained in 1796, continuing its pastor for twenty years. The church prospered under his ministry. He was one of the founders and a trustee of the N. H. Missionary Society, and also trustee of Kimball Union Academy. He fitted several young men for college, and aided others in their theological studies. In 1816 he was appointed Professor of Theology in the Bangor Theological Seminary. At the end of one year he closed his connection with this institution, and commenced preaching at Deer Island, where he continued for the space of twelve years. He d. Feb. 11, 1833, aged 67 years. IN SENATE

COMMISSIONERS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

We have received the following additional particulars in relation to the life of Gov. E. O. Stanard, of St. Louis, which we also append, and which we regret could not have been inserted in its legitimate place in the Genealogy :

EDWIN O. STANARD, s of Obed and Mary Ann (Webster) Stanard; b. Jan. 5, 1832, at Newport, N. H.; removed in 1836 with his parents to Iowa, where he was engaged at farming during his minority. In 1852 he went to St. Louis, without friends and without money, his father being a farmer in moderate circumstances, and there spent several years attending school, teaching in the winters to defray his necessary expenses. In 1856 he became a clerk in a produce store at Alton, Ill. In 1857 he opened a commission and produce store at St. Louis, where he has since resided. Shortly after, he opened a branch house at Chicago, with C. J. Gilbert, and at about the same time, another at New Orleans with Mr. Slayback, a former clerk. In 1868 he sold out to his partners, and has since been engaged with his present partner, J. W. Kauffman, in the flouring business, having one of the largest establishments of the kind in the country. He has accumulated a large fortune.

In 1866 he was elected president of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, and also vice-president of the National Board of Trade. He is president of the Citizens' Insurance Co., and is largely identified with the elevator interests of the city. In 1868 he was elected lieutenant-governor of the state, and as such was one of the ablest and most popular presiding officers the senate of the state has ever had. He was elected to the 43d congress, and was an efficient and valuable member, since which he has declined all nominations to office. He is a member of the Methodist church, and contributes generously to the promotion of its interests. He was a staunch Union man during the civil war. As a speaker, Mr. Stanard is thoroughly self-possessed, deliberate, clear, and convincing,—his tall form, pleasant voice, ardent temperament, and genial face and manner, contributing greatly to his popularity in that direction.

His wonderful success in life, and his large accumulations, have not in any way interfered with his careful and prudent modes of business, neither have they permitted his bark to split upon the rock of extravagant living which has made shipwreck of so many fortunes. He is living modestly in his beautiful home, surrounded by a happy family circle, including his mother, who still survives to enjoy the home, the honors, and the successes which have come to her son. In 1856 he married Hattie A. Kauffman. [See page 536.]

the first of these is the fact that the system is not a simple one, but a complex one, in which the various parts are interrelated and interdependent. The second is the fact that the system is not a static one, but a dynamic one, in which the various parts are constantly changing and evolving. The third is the fact that the system is not a closed one, but an open one, in which the various parts are constantly interacting with the environment. The fourth is the fact that the system is not a linear one, but a non-linear one, in which the various parts are constantly interacting with each other in a non-linear fashion. The fifth is the fact that the system is not a deterministic one, but a probabilistic one, in which the various parts are constantly interacting with each other in a probabilistic fashion. The sixth is the fact that the system is not a simple one, but a complex one, in which the various parts are interrelated and interdependent. The seventh is the fact that the system is not a static one, but a dynamic one, in which the various parts are constantly changing and evolving. The eighth is the fact that the system is not a closed one, but an open one, in which the various parts are constantly interacting with the environment. The ninth is the fact that the system is not a linear one, but a non-linear one, in which the various parts are constantly interacting with each other in a non-linear fashion. The tenth is the fact that the system is not a deterministic one, but a probabilistic one, in which the various parts are constantly interacting with each other in a probabilistic fashion.
